

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

and that one day out of the period between now and that date would not make any difference. Perhaps I should refrain from picking up that argument now either one way or the other, but its inference is pretty clear. I would merely say that I will look at the point raised by the hon. member. In the light of his remarks if it is clear that the interim supply debate is going to end on a certain day anyway regardless of how much time is given to it in the meantime, I will certainly think over this argument and seek to bring forward the Canada pension plan at the earliest possible date that it can be brought forward.

Mr. Knowles: Early next week, let us hope.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.19 p.m.
