saying they thought—that nothing had been done for Ireland in thirty years.

Difference in Thirty Years.

"When I started in public life thirty years ago, Ireland was a nation of paupers and slaves. Thirty years after Ireland is transformed into a nation of prosperous and free men." He gave instance after instance to prove the statesment he made as to the condition formerly. Men driven to vote in the ballotiess elections by the landlords who compelled their votes by the tyranny of their position; unable to marry without the consent of the landlord as in a Kerry estate; liable to eviction at amy moment, whether the rent was paid or no; face to face with starvation, as in 1846 and in 1879, from the failure of the potato crop; such were the state of things. To-day 300,000 tenants were living in bought out farms. In a few years 200,000 more will have their farms bought. This means that 3,000,000 people will be rooted on the soil of Ireland and owning it, and the very mame of landlord will be forgotten. (Applause).

No Chance for Socialism.

What would be the political consequences? As American capitalist was afraid of socialism. A nation of 3,000,000 people owning their own property was the biggest barrier that could be put up against socialism, was Mr. O'Connor's argument. (Applement) plause).

Some were afraid of revolution, but he had never heard of revolution with a peasant proprietary. They constituted a conservative and solid social basis.

Thirty years ago the laborers of Ireland were the scandal and shame of civilization. They lived in cabins which General Gordon declared to be worse than anything he had seen among the Indiane or the Hottentots. To-day there were 55,000 new slate-rooted houses with white weathed To-day there were 55,000 new slate-roofed houses, with white-washed walks, all hygienic appliances, and from half an acre to an acre of ground attached. As Mr. O'Connor enlarged on this aspect of the new Ireland and described "the soil of Ireland as jewelled with those 55,000 incuses," there was loud appliance.

Home Rule for All.

If the time came when the colonies were to be governed by a parliament at Westminster, they should have some voice in it. He was not going to fore-shadow any method by which the idea could be carried out. That would be premature and thought had not yet matured upon the question, but they were all agreed upon the principle. matured upon the question, but they were all agreed upon the principle. How could a parliament be imperial and local at the same time?

He believed, therefore, that a local.

Canada had solved the problem with a logical and rational system. So they would in Britain, and rising above the ocal houses there would be the great mperial assembly devoting its time to imperial affairs and in which all the empire would be represented.

May Realize in June Next.

The Sectch and the We'sh were already convinced. The English were slower, but he would not be surprised see home rule by next June. did not say it was probable, but that it was possible. The conference of Liberal and Conservative leaders in England made him hope for this result. Personally he knew nothing of their doings, but he prayed that they their doings, but he prayed that they might come to a reasonable and ra-tional agreement which would satisof all parties.

If the Liberals did not betray the principle to which they were pledged, and he thought that inconceivable, the veto of the house of lords would be abolished. In that case home rule was certain. But if the Conservatives was certain. But if the Conservatives did not agree that the Liberal party, with a majority in the haouse, much have the same freedom to pass its bills as the Conservatives, an appeal to the country would certainly result in the democracy of England returnin the democracy of England returning a Liberal majority which no constitutional sovereign would ignore. He believed Mr. Balfour might in a broad and generous spirit, grant, not as from one party only, but as a free gift from both parties, the home rule he must recognize as inevitable.

Your Ideal of Perfection in Player - Pianos

Are you delaying the purchase of YOUR player-piano until certain imperfections are removed, and that perfection which you naturally desire in YOUR instrument shall have been more satisfactorily obtained ? Then come see hear the and determine for yourself how nearly it realizes your ideal. We have succeeded in entirely eliminating that "unnatural stiffness" of the action which many people have considered the only shortcoming of player-pianos. By a unique control of the oneumatics we get the effect of the "human touch" so perfectly as to leave no distinction from the artistic touch of master fingers. Its wonderful rendition of difficult selections is absolutely void of all mechanical characteristics.

Until you have heard the Mason & Risch Player-Piano you have no fair conception of how thoroughly it is possible to satisfy the most exacting requirements. May we not have the privilege of demonstrating it to you?

"that Fraser had a cerebral hemorrhage a few days before this examination. Would that not have been likely to confuse his mind?"

"I should think it would, but I saw no evidence lof such a thing, and I examined the pupils of his eyes and observed his walk."

Mr. King wanted to know the difference between senile dementia and normal senility. Dr. Ryan said there was no such a thing as normal senility. Mr. King quoted from Krappalin, the best known authority on mental disease, to show that there was, but Dr. Ryan preferred another word as synonymous with old senile dementia—progressive deterioration. He would not look for any improvement in a man so afflicted.
