A report is given of a meeting of organists where the subject of a Canadian Guild of Organists based upon the lines of the Royal College of Organists of England, was discussed. This report has been copied by one of the leading musical papers of England, and it is interesting to notice that this old country paper, The Musical News, is In sympathy with the resolution passed. The time has now come when the professional organists of this country must take some defaults action in order to take some definite action, in order to protect their national distinction, as well as carefully to cultivate and mould a purely Canadian national church school of music.

There appears to be a difference of opinion in the profession as to whether the organists of this country shall become a part of an American organ-Canadian, with purely Canadian sent iment, ideals and management with the natural result of a purely Canadian national development in this, the greatest of all arts, music. An article in Toronto papers, evidently inspired by organists in favor of the American Guild being adopted in Canada, makes a very weak attempt to justify their
