THE HACKING COUGH.

One of the meanest things to get rid of is a hacking cough. There is apparently no cause for it. No soreness, no irritation at first; but the involuntarily effort of the muscles of the throat to get rid of something is almost constant. Of course, with many cough is a habit, but it is a bad habit, and should be stopped. When you realize this and try to stop it, you find you can't, for by this time there is an actual irritation, which will never get better without treatment.

cold. He was indeed freshly and unexpectedly romantic under his apparent invulnerability. Once, long ago in early manhood, he had seen for an instant ideal love, as h had dreamed it. It had not been for him, and it had flown to fairer worlds almost be fore he had realized its beauty, but he had never forgotten the revelation. If now he sometimes looked over-curiously at the girls and women he met-it was because he had always an irrational hope that that divine glimpse might again be vouchsafed to him. How did he know but that any day, in any drawing-room, in the street, on the river, he might meet the lady of his dreams. He had always been disap pointed hitherto. Never, since Mary Grayson died, had he met Love.

Women of all ages made much of him He was eligible as well as attractive, and had gifts of mind as well as of person and Standish could hardly have explained himself how he had drifted into being always at Mrs. Dolly's beck and call, and hearth-rug at "The Cedars" when the Lawrences's butler brought in the afternoon tea. It was Mrs. Dolly's doing, no doubt and Tiny, who was head over ears in love with his heartless little wife, looked on Standish arrived one afternoon in April rather later than usual, and found Mrs. Lawrence very much put out at something or other. Even the lilies of the valley from Covent Garden, which he laid at her feet, failed to dispel the cloud on her brow. For the first time Standish felt that Mrs. Dolly was inclined to impose a yoke upon him to which his broad shoulders did not bend While he was chafing a little at the lady's exactions, the hopes of the house, Guy, owed more demurely by their sister, Millient, a mincing little girl, who, by and bye, would be the image of her mother. It was a jest of Mrs. Dolly's that Standish was to marry Millicent one day; and even now, at eight years old, Millicent, nursing her doll,

With such a heart throb the lad of eighteen had looked on the heaven-destined beauty of Mary Grayson, but never since, never since had it beaten with such a bigh hope, with such a quick despair.

"She will have to prove it, then! She admired it from the beginning, my heautiful pink pearl pin. I should never have suspected her, of course, only for my darling Millicent's acuteness. Will you defend Miss O'Brien, Mr. Standish?"

Herbert Standish made a step or two to the girl's side, and took her cold fingers in his and raised them to his lips.

"If she will permit me." he said, "I shall defend her with my life."

He seemed to look down into her heart in that instant of time, to ask her if she was really the one he had been looking for since he lost Mary Grayson. What she answered with her steadfast long look he could not read so easily. Only he was sure she was honest and true, and that her love was his to win if he could. confronting each other. The lady was in a high state of wrath. Her cheek had an added brilliance to that of the rouge-pot, and her eyes were nar. rowing and opening to display a fierce light in depths that usually looked shallow nough. Her voice was raised, her dramatic Dolly's friendship with Herbert Standish right hand pointed to the pale girl, who stood with one hand resting on the table as

> As soon as Mrs Lawrence caught sight of Standish, she dropped into a chair, and pressed her handkerchief to her oyes.
> "I am so ashemed," she began, "such a dreadful thing, and to think of those dear children! How little I knew!"
> "Mrs. Lawrence thinks I stole one of her jewels," said the girl, answering the question in Standish's face. She was white to the lies but stood perfectly unright, and tion in Standish's face. She was white to the lips, but stood perfectly upright, and something in the pose of her uplifted face suggested an appeal from an earthly to a Heavenly judge.

"Think!" echoed Mrs. Lawrence furiously "When it was found hidden away among your things, you horrid girl. Upon my word, I think in the interests of justice I shall have to prosecute you. If I send you back to your father you will be presently stealing from somebody else."

"Nonsense!" said Standish, with a roughness he had never before used to a woman. "Miss O'Brien has stolen nothing of yours. What hallucination is this, Mrs. Lawrence?"

Mrs. Dolly gasped for breath, then recovered herself, and her next speech had a slow and cold malice.

"She will have to prove it, then! She

There was a horrible commotion outside, and suddenly a struggling little girl in the midst of a mass of boys came as though from a catapult into the middle of the drawing room floor.

"Here she is, the little sneak!" cried Guy,

Cecil, and Arthur with one voice, pushing their sister Millicent towards the astonished group by the mantelshelf.

Millicent was dishevelled and looked cold.
Her eyes had frozen tears in them, and her

Her eyes had frozen tears in them, and her lips were blue.

"What have you been doing to vour sister, you rough boys?" cried Mrs. Dolly indignantly, forgetting her own grievances for the moment.

"Only holding her head downward over the pond till she confessed," cried her brothers triumphantly.

"Confessed what?"

"Why that she speaked that old hin of and began to run forlornly down her checks.

"I did do it." she said, "and I don't know what I did it for, and if it wasn't for those hateful boys I'd say now I didn't do t. But they'd nearly drown me again."

Mrs. Dolly pushed the sobbing penitent from her

Mrs. Dolly pushed the sobbing penitent from her.

"I'm really very moch aunoyed," she said. "I'm sure I don't know why people ever have any children to be so horrid. I must apologise, Miss O'Brien. Of course, you won't care to remain in charge of these children any longer."

Standish had a wicked thought of suggesting that Miss O'Brien had a very good case for damages, but refrained for Tom Lawrence's sake.

"It has only made us understand each other a little sconer," he said, taking up again the hand which the entrance of the young Lawrences had made him drop. "But, of course, in any case I could not have spared her to you for very long, Mrs.
