LAYS OF THE HIGHLANDS AND ISLANDS.

BY JOHN STUART BLACKIE,

Emeritus Professor of Greek in the University of Edinburgh.

"It may safely be said that there is not a Scotsman living anywhere on the face of the habitable globe who has not a warm corner in his heart for John Stuart Blackie. This universal tender regard has been well earned, and is in every way worthily bestowed. Our hearts warm to him partly because of his genuine love for our country—its hills, rivers, and glens, its lowliest people, its history, and its good name—but far more because of what he is in himself—a man of high purpose and generous nature. Professor Blackie's many admirers will welcome a re-issue of his 'Lays of the Highlands and Islands.' The book opens with a prose essay entitled 'A Talk with Tourists,' in which the Professor takes us over the ground his muse has traversed, and says many things which will be interesting and useful to a wanderer over the Scottish Highlands. A better guide than Professor Blackie could not be had. He sees and remarks upon everything, from the clouds above to the rocks beneath—indeed he seems to have something more than a bowing acquaintance with the science of geology. He roams over the whole West and North Highlands, from Arran to Shetland, and some of the best pieces in the book are in honour of places in Aberdeenshire and Dumbartonshire."—The Dundee Advertiser.

"An excellent popular edition of Professor Blackie's 'Lays of the Highlands and Islands' is issued from the fertile press of Mr. Walter Scott, by means of which, we doubt not, multitudes will make acquaintance with the fine, breezy, and racy poems of Highland scenery which, from time to time, this author has given to the public. By way of preface or introduction Professor Blackie prefixes his 'Talk with the Tourists,' which may be called a kind of unconventional guide-book to the summer route, rendered so accessible and so popular by the splendid arrangements of the Clyde pleasure steamers. It is not every tourist, perhaps, who can boast of the pedestrian prowess of the perfervid Professor, who, whatever he may be now equal to, seems in former years to have made light of the stature and ruggedness of the highest of his native mountains."—The Newcastle Daily Journal.
