MR. HENRI K. JORDAN IS ENJOYING LONDON

The following letter from Mr. Henri K. Jordan from Old London, will be read with interest by music lovers in Brantford:

"Since arriving in London I have been fortunate enough to hear so much good music that I think it selfish not to pass it on as far as possible to those at home."

Last Sunday we went to Albert Hall to hear Alma Gluck, soprano, of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, who was to make her initial appearance here; Kreisler, the noted violinist, and De Pachmann, the pianist. We arrived at the hall half an hour before the program was to begin and found it thronged with people, although it is an immense building—so large, in fact, that the people on the opposite side appeared like dolls. We secured seats behind the platform, where the chorus is placed when there is one. We could see everything and hear splendidly. The building is a huge arena, oval in shape, with seats on every side, and has no less than five galleries. One excellent feature of these concerts is that those who cannot afford to pay are admitted to the upper gallery free, they having to stand, though, while seats cost all the way from 25 cents to box seats at $95.

The hall was built in 1867-71 at a cost of over a million dollars, as a memorial to the Prince Consort, and seats ten thousand people comfortably.

When Kreisler appeared he was warmly greeted, and immediately afterwards, as he raised his violin, there was the most profound hush. In all that audience of over ten thousand people there was absolute stillness; it was oppressive. He began to play, and throughout the five selections comprising his first number he had attention such as it has never been my pleasure to see before. Selection (a) was La Chasse, written by J. B. Cartier (1765-1841); it was thrilling. Based on the familiar intervals associated with the hunting horn, and effectively designed to suggest the coming and passing of a hunting party, it was one continuous example of double stopping, practically perfect in intonation, played like a master. The audience waited until the last note was completed, then a roar of applause rolled up and around that mighty dome, continuous and persistent, and he had to repeat the number. After his last selection he was recalled four times.

Alma Gluck was second on the program, and won the favor of the audience at once. She was in good voice, and was encored several times. Kreisler again appeared and played "Hejre Kati." It was delightful—such harmonies, like drops of liquid music. Oh, the applause! For a moment after he had finished it was like the stillness of death, and then a max of enthusiasm before. I have no words left to describe the pandemonium that broke loose when he finished. Applause, cheers, everyone standing, handkerchiefs waving. He came back and played again—I must be brief. He was recalled time after time. The audience was crowding to the platform, hundreds had climbed upon it, until during his last encore (I really could not count them all), who was last on the program. Of course, he played Chopin, five numbers. When he came on I was disappointed—long hair, very odd mannerisms, so very different from any one else, almost grotesque in his gestures, it seemed to me he was trying to be "funny." He talked to the audience around him; he had the piano bench lowered, then raised, then lowered again, and, of course, by this time every person in the hall was smiling broadly. Finally he began. His playing was marvellous; number after number rolled from his fingers, each one better than the last; each one arousing the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm, until he ended with the Valse in E flat major at such a tempo, and with such accuracy as positively lifted the audience to their feet.

I thought we had reached the climax of enthusiasm before. I have no words left to describe the pandemonium that broke loose when he finished. I will write in a few days of a wonderful service I heard at the Abbey this afternoon. HENRI JORDAN.
