There is a land, of every land the pride, Beloved by heaven o'er all the world beside Where brighter suns dispense screece light And milder moons imparatise the night— A land of beauty, virtue, valor, truth, Time tutored age and love exalted youth; Time tutored age and love exaited youth;
There is a spot of earth supremely blest,
A dearer, sweeter spot than all the rest,
Where man, creation's tyrant, casts aside
His sword and scepter, pageantry and pride,
While in his softened looks benignly blend
The sire, the son, the husband, brother, friend
Where shall that land, that spot of earth

ONE SUMMER GIRL'S DIARY

Daisyhurst Inn, Daisyhurst-by-the-Sea, July 1.—When I came away for the summer, I made up my mind that I would keep a diary, just like a girl in a story book, and make a record of all the pleas-ant times I had during my vacation. But so little has happened in the last ten days that I have come near accepting the clerk's invitation to go driving. There have been only two men here since we arrived, one a two weeks' old bridegroom and the other an old gentleman who wears a shawl when he sits on the pl-azza. Just fancy! Both are equally imwe girls are all dissatisfied, for it isn't any fun living in a golf skirt and a shirt waist when one has no end of clothes ready for a brilliant summer campaign. Unless something happens I, for one, shall go somewhere else where there is gambling or something that is popular with men.

Later.-At last a man! We girls were all up in Lucy's room, talking about the dull time we were having, when I heard the rattle of a stage, and I peered out through the blinds.

"What's the use of looking?" said Lucy. "It's only another family or some more women. This place is a regular ladies' seminary." I didn't say a word. I just wanted to stun them with the intelligence that there was a man in the stage. Besides, I wanted to be quite sure. I have often read about sailors shipwrecked on a raft, imagining that they saw ships. But I controlled my voice as well as I could, and then I said in a hoarse whis-"Girls, it's a man!"

They rushed to the window in a perfect panic. Gertie was on the bed, and she nearly sprained her ankle rushing across the room.
"His suit case is marked 'J. D.,' said I.

"Probably his name is Jack," said My She lit the gas and began to heat the curling iron. Her hand shook so that it rattled the iron against the gas jet.

"Blue polka dot stockings and patent leather shoes," said Lucy. "He looks like some one I know."
"There is a class pin in his coat," said.

Myrtle, peeking out over our shoulders.
"There are a bag of golf sticks and a banjo case going in." I said.
"Isn't he lovely?" said Gertie as he stepped out. "He walks just like an athleta"

"I'm going to wear my pink muslin," said Myrtle.
We all fluttered off to our root least the others did. It takes more than a man to make me act so foolishly. Of course, I am glad he is here. Besides, I saw him first. I wonder what "J. D." stands for? After all, there are lots of men in the world. Those girls are so ridiculous. I think I'll wear my Dresden taffeta with val lace. None of the others can touch it.

Later Bulletin, same day.—I don't know how it is I ever associated with those girls as I have for the last few days. The way they threw themselves at that boy's head! For he's only a boy.

We walked late into dinner separately. Until tonight we always filed in one after the other, like a funeral, ten minutes before it was ready. Gertie had her eyebrows darkened, and she had on a thin black dress that show-ed her arms and shoulders. She had a fan on a pearl chain. Fancy a fan at Myrtle's got the table next to his, but her back is turned so she can't work her eyes on him. I suppose slie's just wild. Gertie's at the other side of the room, and she laughed out loud all through dinger hering to attract his attention. He and she laughed out loud all through dinner, hoping to attract his attention. He looked around at her once in a surprised sort of way. I don't wonder. Lucy is directly opposite him, and she kept staring—a baby stare—at him. I pretended not to notice him. He looked over once and just raised his eyebrows. I happened to think of something funny and smiled unconsciously. He laughed and I sat carelessly in the large chair in the center of the hall, just opposite the dining room door and read a letter I had received. Gertie came up and spoke to me, but I cut her, and she went over id began to practice her laugh on the clerk. It sounds something like I should fancy a hyena's would-those affected laughs.

Myrtle went into the parlor and to sing college songs with her ton the soft pedal. Lucy, of course, went out on the piazza and began to play with a dog. She never noticed the dog until tonight.

I wondered where Gertie was. He looked at Myrtle, and she biushed. She holds her breath and counts 13 and it makes her cheeks red.

There is a strong breeze through the hall and it blew the letter I was reading from my fingers out through the door and down the steps. I rushed out on the pi-fold of paper containing the same advertisement. The Italian's eyes were nearly popping out of his head. The young man put on a great show of indignation.

"This is the worst bunco game that I ever ran against," he exclaimed.
"Take these peanuts back and keep them. I don't want the blame things," and with a rapid motion, he extracted a handful of peanuts from the same left-hand pocket, and throwing them in with the Italian's stock mixed them up, and went on his way, leaving the stalian gesticulating wildly, and mak-

This much was witnessed by a porter, who decided forthwith that the young man was up to some game, an impression which was strengthened when he saw him approach ano her peanut vender and go through the same performance. So when the young man went on his way the reporter accosted him and asked him what the game was. The man was delightfully frank. Here is what he

"I get enough fun out of this thing watching the faces of those dagoes to pay me for doing it, even if I wasn't getting good pay. Say, it's the greatest game ever played. You see, it's this way. I make a living suggesting ways to advertise to big concerns. Now the Bumm Bumm Shin Plaster company wanted to reach the common people with advertisements of their stuff. So they send for me and ask me for a suggestion. The peanut game was one that I thought out a long time ago, but had never put into operation The Bumm Bumm people thought i was all right and were willing to put up good moncy. I had a couple of wo-men open up a bushel of peanits, fold up these little circulars, put them inside, and then, by the use of a very small quantity of paste of each shell, put them together again. Then I told them that for $10 a day I would mix those fake peanuts up with the stocks of venders, so that every man who bought peanuts on the street would be bound to get at least one of ours. Say, they were dead stuck on the game, and we closed at once. That's all there is
