FROM A DIFFERENT STANDPOINT.

(Conclusion.)

'I should have said you were the last person to—'

'Dream dreams?' she interrupted. 'But once I was a girl, and all girls are dreamers, only sometimes the dreams are spoiled. Mine never were. There was never any time for lovers and love making and I was not the sort of girl to attract admirers, in any case. But always there were my dreams, even when I worked hardest for the children. Mother was so frail, and there was so much to be done. She has been at rest only a year; but before that, the children were settled in life, and I had only to work for her. It was easier than working for one's self. I loved her so! But that was over, too, at last; and now nobody needs me in any special way. All along there were my lovely dreams. I have never told any one before. It was too late for—but I have not missed or needed anything, for have I not had my—'

She stopped, a tender light in her soft eyes.

'What?' he asked, leaning forward in the dim light.

'Only my ideal, my dream lover. He was always young and fair to see, always bonny and good and true, always coming, coming to me.' Her voice was almost a whisper now. Her face was transfigured.

Lawrence bent down and touched the fair, strong hand on the window ledge with his lips.

'Hasn't he come at last?' I love you,' he said softly.

Instantly she was the calm, practical woman again.

'Of course you do,' she said in a matter of fact way. 'You are sick, and I've tried to be good to you. I'll light your lamps. Mrs. Ellis is leaving on the nine o'clock express. Shall I send her to bid you good-by?'

In the flood of light she stood cool and collected, waiting for his reply.

'If you please,' he stammered, his face crimson, his eyes lowered.

Almost immediately Mrs. Ellis came.

'I wish I could carry a better report to Dora and Uncle Ben,' she said, looking gravely at the flushed boyish face.

'I will. Dora will be coming to see you when the season is a little nearer over, along with Uncle Ben.'

'Do you really think so? If only she—wouldn't?'

Mrs. Ellis laughed merrily. 'Why, you bad boy, you ought to be glad to see your pretty sweetheart. People say its as good as settled between you three. Ah, there's the carriage and here's Miss Kate to hurry me off. Hope you'll soon be all right. By-by!'

The summer deepened and softened and autumn was near. Dr. Spicer wished to have his patient out of doors while the sunshine lasted. Nobody could drive like Miss Willowby, whose hands were strong and skilful, and who knew every inch of road for miles and miles.

'I'm sorry they are coming,' he said, as they drove slowly along. 'Dora always manages to spoil things so.'

'I dare say she will be very pleasant, coming fresh from your own world,' Miss Willowby said brightly.

'No, she won't. Say, Miss Kitty, have you forgotten what I told you last night you read for me? I'm not such a boy as you think. I've had lots of experience, and no end of love affairs. Don't smile that way, please; I am terribly in earnest. Won't you let me be your ideal? Don't I look a little like him? I do love you, honestly; won't you love me? Somehow I believe you do, already.' And bending forward he looked laughingly into her grave eyes. 'Let's get married, and then I shall be happy, if I am—not strong. And you love me, don't you? This probably isn't what that ideal has been saying, but it's the best I can do.'

She turned her cool, pale face to him, and looked calmly into his eager eyes,

Of all the nerve-tonics—bromos, celeries or nervines—your doctor will tell you that the Hypophosphites are best understood. So thoroughly related is the nervous system to disease that some physicians prescribe Hypophosphites alone in the early stages of Consumption. Scott's Emulsion is Cod-liver Oil, emulsified, with the Hypophosphites, happily blended. The result of its use is greater strength and activity of the brain, the spinal cord and the nerves.

'I have let you say it all now. You won't do it again, will you?' she said slowly.

'I am afraid I shall, dear Kitty,' he said miserably. 'You are what I've been needing all along. The girls were always unsatisfactory. Why can't I say these things to you?'

'Because I can't help to take care of you, if you persist,' she answered quietly.

'Not take care of me? Then I won't be taken care of at all. That's no reason.'

'It is wrong. You are simply pleased with my home, and I have been able to make you comfortable, It is a sort of gratitude, and not love,'

'You know better. It isn't like you to be so unfair.'

But she had stopped at the gate.

Miss Willowby had always carried the invalid his tea, but tonight she was late with it.

'Set it down, please. I'm going to finish what I was saying.' She placed the tray on the table and stood before him. 'Dear Kitty, you know I'm right. Can't you see that I belong to you? I began to feel it when I heard your gate latch click behind me, when I came into the fragrance of your roses, when I looked into your eyes. Oh, the sweet homeliness of it all! You can't help caring for me.'

'No,' she said quietly, 'I cannot.'

'Then let me have my way, dear Kitty.'

'Have you thought of what you are saying? Don't you know how impossible it is? I am not a young woman. Soon I shall be faded and old. You are a boy, with life all before you.' Her voice was not quite steady here, but she went on: 'Your friends would ridicule the idea.'

'As if I were to blame for being a boy! And besides haven't you been loving a boy all along in that ideal of yours? And haven't I told you that you have always been in my heart? Don't put me off. It's bad enough to have the doctors looking graver every day—'

'Hush. You may be well again.'

'They haven't said so; and besides, I—let me have my way.'

'But your uncle and Dora! No, it is not to be thought of.'

'I have no one to please; answer me!'

'Lawrence, I will answer you five years from to-night. Your uncle will want you to try other doctors, so you will go away. Come to see me when the five years are past, and I will answer you. I shall be forty then. In the meantime do whatever you want to; of course you will not feel bound in any way. Now that is all. Please do not speak of it again;' and turning the light more fully upon the tea tray she left him.

When the asters along Miss Willowby's walk were all abloom, Dora came—Dora, with her curly flaxen hair, yellow brown eyes, and dimpled, peach blow face. She was pretty as a flower as she came up the walk in the drift of autumn leaves that fell from the elms all about her like a shower of gold. Nobody noticed that Miss Willowby's lip quivered as she held the tiny gloved hand.

Behind the pretty vision came Uncle Ben, an old man with fierce, grizzled side whiskers, and small, fiery eyes.

'Oh, Larry, how you do look! Oh, have you actually been shut up in this doleful place all summer? It was really heavenly at Saratoga. Are you getting worse, Larry?'

'I'm sure I don't know, Dora. Nobody has told me. It may be the way folks get well. Anyhow I'm snug and happy.'

'Oh, dear me, don't talk so. Uncle Ben, don't let him! I'm afraid you must be going to die, you know.'

Uncle Ben scowled fiercely, and Miss Willowby, laughing in her cheery way, took Dora out.

'Now you know what I meant,' Lawrence said to Miss Willowby next morning. 'Girls are—unsatisfactory.'

'But this is a wonderfully pretty one,' she said, shaking up a cushion.

'Pretty—yes, she's that, and nothing more. Do you know, the doctors were graver than ever this morning? Not even Spicer could get up a smile. Of course you saw them.' He smiled as he stood unsteadily before the small, bright fire that crackled on the hearth.

'Dear Kitty, I am surely not doing well. Only think, I—hush, that was my name. He is in the hall. Be still—I will hear!'

With his bright eyes holding her, he listened. The hall door was ajar. Yes, Uncle Ben was speaking in a high, impatient voice.

'Bravery, indeed! And he will find out about the bank failure. The boy is ruined. I tell you, Dora, you must help him. He gladly lost half his fortune securing yours to you. Not engaged? Who cares? It has always been my plan to marry you two, and you said you loved him. Get him to propose now, and marry the boy at once.'

Then Dora's treble came to them.

'Oh, well, of course I loved Larry, but I'm glad he never proposed. He never shall, either. I don't want a poor man for my husband; and what should I want with him, anyway, if he is to be helpless and blind?'

Before the cheery fire the unsteady form swayed. Miss Willowby's strong arm lowered it gently to the couch. Lawrence closed his eyes; his face was white.

HAD INDIGESTION!

For a Matter of Some Forty Years or More.

Joseph Gardner, stove dealer, of Bath, Ontario, is a great believer in Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills for indigestion, constipation, dyspepsia, Bright's disease, rheumatism, and kidney, liver and stomach troubles generally.

"I was troubled for over forty years with indigestion and constipation," he writes. "At intervals I suffered from severe headache. I spent dollars and dollars without result until Mr. Ball, our druggist, advised me to try Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. I did so, and must say that they are the only remedy that gave me relief. I would not be without them for anything."

Many people suffer from rheumatism. Bad blood and diseased kidneys bring it on. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills will remedy all this and cure rheumatism, sciatica and all kindred complaints. Here is a sample case:

"My boy was all crippled up and suffered awfully with rheumatism," writes Mrs. H. Wills, of Chesley, Ont. "He also had a touch of diabetes. The doctors could do him no good, but Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills completely cured him."

Sold by all dealers and Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. 25c.
