SABBATH OBSERVANCE.
The Canadian Legislature, during its recent session, appointed a Committee to make inquiries into the subject of Sabbath labor under Government control, including the conveyance and delivery of letters by the Post-office on the Lord's day. Public attention had previously been very widely directed to the subject of Sabbath observance generally, as is evident from the number of Petitions sent to the Legislature from both provinces; 156 Petitions, with 17,484 signatures, having been presented from Upper Canada, and forty, with 3,000 signatures, from Lower Canada, making a total of 20,484 petitioners. Episcopians, Presbyterians, and Methodists. The Committee of the Legislature issued a schedule of inquiries to intelligent and leading men in every department of business and public life in both provinces, with a view to gathering the prevailing opinion. A digest of the replies to the questions is embodied in the Committee's Report, from which we shall extract a few specimens, showing upon the whole, a remarkably healthy state of feeling in regard to the moral and religious obligations and the physical advantages of the Sabbath, and a strong concurrence with the opinions of the Christian community in the mother country.

To the question, "Would the inquiry to trade, or inconvenience to individuals, arising from the closing of the Post-office on the Lord's day, be so great as to justify the opening of all offices on that day?" forty in Upper Canada reply that it would not, and only three take the opposite view. Lower Canada being again nearly equally divided, sixteen in the negative and fourteen in the affirmative. "Again, do you think mail steam-boats and mail stages should be relieved from starting on any route on the Lord's day, so far as the Government is concerned?" Forty-four in Upper Canada and twenty-four in Lower Canada answer in the affirmative, two adding, "except in cases of urgent necessity;" eight only are of a contrary opinion. A diversity of opinion is brought out as to "the stoppage of stages and steamers on the Lord's day," whilst travelling with the mails; but thirty-six answers affirm that the arrest put upon these conveyances on Sabbath would be productive of no injury. One answer bears that by doing the business of seven days in six, a seventh part of the expense would be saved; another, that by discontinuing Sabbath travelling, a better class of men would be employed on the conveyances, and proprietors and the public be proportionately benefited. Two more questions from the schedule:—"Do you think the canals should be closed on the Lord's day?" Forty-five in Upper Canada, and nineteen in Lower Canada, answer in the affirmative, and only seven in the negative. "Would the closing of the canals on the Lord's day be injurious? And if so how?" Thirty-two answer simply, that it would not be injurious, and many others give special replies to the same effect. In Lower Canada fourteen answer in the negative, and only four in the affirmative.

The testimony of the Mayor of Kingston, John Counter, Esq., is especially of importance. This gentleman stated that he employs 150 men, and turns over 100,000 in a year, but has not opened his letters on the Sabbath for the last quarter of a century that he has been in business, nor has he ever compelled his servants to work on the Lord's day. He is of opinion that the stoppage of the Sunday mails and Post-office delivery would be a public benefit:—"I believe," said he, "that from the active nature of man, an occasional cessation from labor is necessary to prevent him from being too much engrossed with the things of the world, enabling him also to resume his labors with renewed vigor of body and mind. I think that man could not remain a moral and religious being while living in disobedience to the Divine command, 'Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, &c.'"

Leaving Canada, with this noble example of the Mayor of Kingston, we turn from the subject of Sunday work to that of Sunday play. Germany is often held up to us in this country, by frivolous tourists, as an example for our imitation in the matter of Sunday merry-making. This habit is indeed the usual concomitant of a state of political despotism, as witness France and Prussia in the present day, and our country in the time of Stuarts and the Book of Sports. The German emigrant settlers in Newark, wishing to indulge their loose notions of Sabbath-keeping in the fashion of their own country, presented a Petition to the Common Council, praying for such a modification of the existing law as to permit them to "visit wine and beer saloons, and the like, and to engage in such amusements as they had been accustomed to in their native country." The Petition was remitted to a Committee, whose Report is published in the New York papers, and is an admirable document, it is, although too long for being transcribed at length. The Report bears a powerful testimony to the Divine obligation of the Sabbath, to its religious and social benefits, and what we request the working classes of this Kingdom earnestly to consider.—The inseparable connexion between a well-kept Sabbath, on the one side; and on the other, the rights of citizenship, and the progress of the laboring man in all that conduces to his welfare and dignity.

The example of France, when the Sabbath was abolished during the madness of the first revolution, afford a salutary warning to nations, which like England, Canada, and the United States, have prospered in proportion to their reverence for the laws of God. The miserable condition of Mexico, and the South American republics, where the Sabbath is practically annulled or made a mere holiday, might have afforded another example of the danger of casting off the fear of God in the government of the world:—"The example of France, fifty years since, where the Christian religion and the observance of the Sabbath were set aside by the wild frenzy of a people, just released from the restraints of law, was succeeded by a 'reign of terror' before which was swept out of existence every vestige of religion, virtue, happiness, and liberty, and all France was made a vast charnel-house, which found its necessary termination in despotism; and such would be the result here if the same unrestrained license should be given to the passions of men unschooled in the elements of self-control, and regardless of a due subservience to religious principles. Your Committee would commend to all our citizens the superior claims to regard and veneration of the time-honored custom of our fathers; and they trust the day is far distant when we shall exchange the 'sound of music and revelry' for the 'sound of music and revelry' and the services of prayer and praise befitting a Christian people in the service of God, for the plays or pastimes, such as are granted by despots to their enslaved subjects. If we value at all the priceless legacy of our free government, which has been bequeathed to us by its founders, wherein we enjoy all that is valuable in liberty and freedom (for we regard liberty without law as the most awful infliction with which Heaven ever permitted a doomed people to be cursed), we can look forward with no pleasant anticipations to the day when all the hallowed associations that cluster around the Christian Sabbath shall be drowned by the din and defilement of Sunday desecration and debauchery."

The Committee, wisely regarding the national happiness as depending less upon the form of government than upon the virtue and intelligence of the community, recommend a steadfast adherence to those principles which with the welfare of the people and the hopes of the republic are inseparably identified; and whilst offering a welcome to the natives of every land to settle in their territory, they remind them that their choice is voluntary, and must be made on the reasonable condition that whatever their previous habits may have been, they must conform to the laws and practice of the country of their adoption. These laws the Committee conclude by recommending to be firmly and rigorously enforced, without respect to persons or country. The unanimous deliverance of the Common Council was in accordance with the recommendation of their Committee. It is subjoined:—"Resolved, That the demands of a portion of the German population, as set forth in this memorial of the 6th ultimo, are of such a character as to call forth a prompt, clear, and unequivocal refusal on the part of the city authorities to entertain a proposition, immoral in its tendency, and so destructive to the peace and good order of this community. "Resolved, That the City Marshal and his assistants, and all other Executive police officers of the city, be and are hereby directed to enforce strictly, and rigorously, the laws and ordinances for the preservation of the tranquility of the Sabbath, and the prevention of the traffic in intoxicating liquors. "The Report and Resolutions were unanimously adopted."—Scottish Guardian

AVARICES.—Good nature, like the bee, collects honey from every herb. Ill-nature, like the spider, sucks poison from the sweetest flower. The spirit with evil never ceases. We are afloat in a leaky ship, and must keep pumping to keep it from going down. A man's true prosperity often begins when he is said to be ruined; and his ruin when he is said to be prospering. In whatever shape evil comes, we are apt to exclaim with Hamlet, "Take any shape but that!" The best source of affliction, next to religious trust, is necessary labour. The surest way to improve one's condition is to improve one's self.

Mrs. Farrington addresses Isaac whilst eating a dish of strawberries:—"How grand your are growing; by-and-by you will want to live on Mantilla ice-cream! You must be so cautious, Isaac! I don't like to see a child die with such voracity of appetite."

PRAYER.—Time employed in prayer is not spent in vain. Prayer is the richest traffic in the world; the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof is more than fine gold. By intercourse with God, we are improved, and made to resemble him, as the face of Moses shone when he came down from the communion of Horeb. How are we refreshed by the exercise when our spirits are weary and ready to faint! How it enables us to leave our fears and cares at the footstep of divine grace; and go away as Hannah did, with our countenance no more sad, and our hearts feeling the peace of God which passeth all understanding.—Jay.

RESPONSIBILITY OF LIVING IN THE CITY.—Let it be written on the heart, that the man who lives and acts as a member of the great city, has a vast responsibility resting upon him. He has abundant opportunities to do good; and fearful will be his account, if he neglects and wastes them. The ship in which he has taken his passage to the eternal world, is freighted with treasures which worlds could not purchase. All around are the rocks and the quicksands, and the ten thousand dangers. This cargo can be landed safely—and everlasting songs of gratitude shall be poured upon the head of every one who is faithful; but fearfully will he meet his doom, who lived and died on such a spot, and all he did, was to help men to unfit themselves for heaven.

POVERTY OF THE PEOPLE OF MADEIRA.—A writer at Madeira, under date of Aug. 23, thus describes the indigent condition of the inhabitants of that Island. A vessel is coming next week to carry off 400 laborers (including their families) passage free to Jamaica, but they are still unwilling to go. They will rather starve than pass a year (cross the sea) and they must starve by hundreds if they remain. Scarcely a cottage has a bed, nor one individual a change of raiment. When they get a shirt it is worn until it drops off their back, and they sleep on a little dirty straw. One cottage was so damp that furps were getting out of the walls. How the people get food is past finding out.

MUMMIES.—Mr. Buckingham thinks the Catacombs of Egypt contain more human bodies than there are people now living on the globe. These mummies are now wholly destitute of any animal matter. It has all changed into a resinous substance or decayed. They are taken from the Catacombs to be exported, and to be used for fuel. The finest are exported whole as objects of curiosity for museums. Certain parts, such as the inside of a head and chest, are sold as a drug, and the backbone is ground into a powder which is highly prized by artists.—Zion's Herald.

CURE FOR YELLOW FEVER AND BLACK VOMIT.—We have been politely favoured with the sight of a letter from Carracas on the subject of the cure of yellow fever and black vomit:—"Dr. Arocha's manner of curing yellow fever, and which has only failed in one instance, is 2 ounces of lime juice and 2 ounces of olive oil, to be given to the patient frequently, until it remains on the stomach, and afterwards at intervals of six hours, until the patient is out of danger; thin broth may be administered. This system is now universally adopted here, and with wonderful effect."—Port of Spain (Trinidad) Gazette.

FAT MAN.—Mr. Bruce, in his Classic and Historic Portraits, speaks of the dangers of becoming too fat in Sparta:—"The ancient Spartans paid as much attention to the rearing of men as the cattle breeders in modern England do the breeding of cattle. They took charge of the firmness and looseness of man's flesh, and regulated the degree of fitness to which it was lawful, in a free state, for any citizen to extend his body. Those who dared to grow too fat or too soft for military exercise and the service of Sparta were soundly whipped. In one particular instance, that of Nearchus, the son of Polybus, the offender was brought before the Ephori, and a meeting of the whole people of Sparta, at which his unlawful fatness was publicly exposed, and he was threatened with perpetual banishment if he did not bring his body within the regular Spartan compass, and give up his culpable mode of living, which was declared to be more worthy of an Ionian than of a son of Laedæmon."

THE COWARD.—Nothing is the world is so fatal to the development of the intellectual powers of the young, as what are commonly called expectations. Take two boys of the same age, and as nearly as may be of the same capabilities. Inform one that he is the heir to a large fortune, which, one day or other, must come into his possession; tell the other that he has not a sixpence to depend on, but must thrive by his own exertion; and ten years afterwards there will be a mighty difference between them. You will find that the one has wrapped up his talent in a cushion, while the other has laid his out in interest. See the man's Negatives.
