A WONDERFUL ADVENTURE.

SEEING 700 DEER AT A LOOK ON THE PIKE'S PEAK TRIAL—ATTACKED BY LIONS.

Sergeant O'Keefe returned last evening from an unsuccessful attempt to ascend the Peak. He says that it is the first time within his experience that he has been thus baffled, and he asks to be excused from ever being subjected to a similar experience. By the reports which he had received from Mr. Sweeney, who is stationed at the Peak, he was led to infer that but little snow had fallen, and in consequence he was not prepared to contend with the obstacles that blocked his path. The journey for the first few miles of the trail was without any dissatisfactory features, but while making an abrupt turn in the trail in the vicinity of Minnehaha Falls, the sergeant was brought to a stand-still by an immense herd of bladktailed deer, which impeded his further progress. He contends that the herd contained full 700 head, and says it just took one hour and forty minutes for them to pass a given point. The sergeant was only armed with a 32-calibre Smith and Wesson revolver, and with this poor apology for a firearm he succeeded in killing 17 of the deer. The only plausible reason that Sergeant O'Keefe can give for the remarkable appearance of this herd is that they were driven from South Park by the storm. As the sergeant was compelled to continue his journey to the Peak, he gathered the game which he had slaughtered, tied their tails together, and slung them over the back of his faithful mule, Balaam, and continued on his way. Everything passed smoothly until line was reached, when the sergeant encountered another serious barrier, as the fierce northwest wind which accompanied the storm had formed mountains of snow across the trail. With the much-trusted veteran mule, Balaam, and an unusual amount of perseverance on the part of himself, Sergeant O'Keefe contrived to surmount a tremendons snow drift 28 feet in depth. When safely upon the other side he paused for a moment, and taking his field glass he viewed the prospect o'er and examined the difficulties with which he had to contend. As far as the eye could reach nothing but snow banks could be seen, some of which were at least 100 feet in height. It only required a brief space of time for the sergeant to make up his mind that it would be useless for him to risk his life in making another rash attempt, so he concluded to return to the springs, but upon turning to the step into the saddle he discovered that the mule had disappeared. The sergeant was now in a sad plight. Had he only survived the terrible raid of 1876 to find death again staring him in the face from starvation? He retraced his steps through the mammoth snow drift, and after a terrible siege of over an hour he found himself standing on the other side, thoroughly exhausted. After he had somewhat revived he glanced around him in hopes of finding some trace of the lost mule, and what was his chagrin to see the much trusted Balaam lying upon his back without feet uplifted in the air at the bottom of a deep ravine. The deer with which he had been festooned were scattered from top to bottom of the ravine. The sergeant secured the game and the mule, and again started on his homeward journey. While passing along a very secluded portion of the trail he was attacked by six ravenous mountain lions, and, in order to save his own life, he was compelled to east away the game which had required so much exertion to capture. Even the seventeen deer did not replenish their ravenous appetites, and still they pursued him, but by the proper manipulation of the mule O'Keefe managed to evade them. He reached the signal office at 8 o'clock last night, and it is doubtful whether he again attempts to traverse the Pikes Peak trail.
