Some Comments. Editor Evening Telegram. Dear Sir,—It was with pleasure I read the discussions of the different speakers at the Board of Trade Rooms on "After the War" problems. The first speaker, Mr. Grise, I particularly wish to deal with. He places our obligations under three headings. 1st, the Spiritual obligations. Well, Sir, without any fault-finding with his remarks, I would suggest that our spiritual obligations be left to the different heads of the various church denominations. They are well able to look after our spiritual welfare. But it is the second obligation that I, and thousands of others will agree with him in—our National obligations. Now, what are our national obligations? Well, Sir, I should say, that in my humble opinion, the housing of the people ought to take first place. Thereby will we be doing an honor to the brave boys who laid down their young and fruitful lives for us, and bring untold happiness to the fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters of a great many of them, and when they look down from their heavenly home, they can conceive the smiles of pleasure that will shine in their eyes, when they know that we did not forget them or those they left behind? Now, Sir, another very serious obligation should be on all our minds. That is those brave boys who are maimed for all time and who will not be able to earn a living for themselves as they could before they went to fight for their country. Something good must be provided for them. Then, there are hundreds of our young men, already returned and who have to return, who gave up good jobs; some of them would make good in the country if we are intending to do our duty toward them; it is time to be "up and doing" in regard to education. It is a good thing to have, and it grieves me to see and know so many of our people grooving up without it. We should be well-ashamed of ourselves; someone should move in regard to this matter, and remove such a stain from the manhood of our island home. However, we can't do too many things at the one time. Some of the problems discussed at the Board of Trade meeting should not give us any great worry at all, for, to my mind, more than half of them will solve themselves. As for organized labor in this country, I don't think there is much to complain about. The sixth article in Mr. Horwood's address says that employers have no right to lower or raise wages. Surely when he expresses that opinion he doesn't mean organized labor? Your humble servant has been for 16 or 17 years interested in the workingmen's wages, and I never received for them one cent, without the full knowledge of every employer who employs Union men, and when a person comes to talk about lowering wages in this country under present conditions, he won't get many to listen to him. Mr. Editor, I for one, am very pleased with the address, and I hope that when the Board meets again that the members will have something good to recommend to the authorities for all those who risked their lives to
