The Maiden's Choice

OR, THE LAIRD OF BIRKENCLEUCH.

A Tale of the Covenanters

Allan followed close in his wake, so close as to able to put his hand on his shoulder at any moment. The curate followed next, and the soldiers behind. The tramping of their heavy boots, and the clanking of their sabres, as they trailed them over the stone floor, made noise enough to warn those within of their approach. When they crossed the threshold, Allan signalled to his men to remain in the passage, and he and Briar stalked loftily into the room.

An expression of insolent triumph was on Charlie's face, and this visibly increased when his eye fell on Marion seated in a recess by the window. He glanced round as if in search of some one else, but except Marjory, whom he knew well enough, the room had no other occupants.

Walter rose at their entrance, and confronted Allan with a mien of cold, haughty, dignity.

'To what am I indebted, sir, for the honour of this visit?' he gravely inquired. 'I shall, in courtesy, call it visit, though methinks the presence of these men behind you might warrant me in calling it intrusion.'

'Call it what you like,' said Charlie. 'I dare say the sight of me is not particularly welcome; but a meeting overnight sometimes brings another in the morning. When we parted last night I was in your debt, and I have taken the earliest opportunity to have scores cleared.'

'Then, sir, I hope it is to make an apology that you have come. A night's reflection has, I trust, shown you the enormity of your attempted outrage, and brought you to express your sorrow to this lady for your violence towards her.'

'Do you trust so?' replied Allan, with a broad sneer. 'Your words greatly belie your thoughts, or if they don't, I shall convince you of your impertinent mistake ere this interview ends. In brief words, my object here is to call you to account for certain doings of yours which savour of contumacy, and to take into custody Marion Gordon and that notorious outlaw Hugh M'Kail, both of whom I would have secured last night, but for your interference—an interference that will cost you dear.'

Marion listened to these words with inward trembling, but outwardly, she kept calm and unmoved.

'Then, sir,' answered Walter, 'I have to inform you that your errand is fruitless. Hugh M'Kail, as you may see, is not here, and this lady whom you have called Marion Gordon, your commission gives you no power to touch.'

'Say you so?' responded Allan, with another sneer. 'I am the best judge of the extent of my commission. She was in company with the wily rebel last night, and must be put under examination.'

'Let the proper authority examine her, then; you have no right to do so. Methinks, her examination will reflect no credit on your conduct, and you should be glad to let last night's encounter remain uninquired into.'

'I have not come here to argue, but to act,' roared Allan, 'and, to cut the matter short, we shall deal with you first. It is reported to me that you are disobeying the law by not attending the Parish Church. How comes that?'

'Yes, Mr. Elliot,' added Briar, the curate, speaking for the first time, and that in a shrill squeaking voice. 'I have been obliged to complain to Captain Allan of your conduct in this respect. I have never seen you within my church door, and your bad example has, I have no doubt, infected many others. But, doubtless, you know the heavy penalty.'

'A fine, I believe,' answered Walter, carelessly.

'Which I shall have the exquisite pleasure of inflicting,' said Charlie, with a sardonic smile. 'As you don't attempt to deny or excuse the charge, I order you to pay down instantly five hundred merks.'

'I shall pay it,' said Walter, 'not to your order, but since the Government have chosen to exact it, and given you, its servant, authority to enforce it. But I leave you to judge Mr Briar, whether this is just the way to commend your Episcopacy to our favourable regard.'

'With that I have nothing to do—nothing to do,' squeaked the curate. 'It is the established religion of the country, and you as loyal subjects are bound to conform to it.—The Presbyterian rebellion must be put down sir—must be put down. You and others in your position have much to answer for. If you the lairds, acted as loyal subjects, the common people would behave better. But we cannot look for anything else from you, knowing the nest from which you fledged.'

'You allude, doubtless, to my residence in the manse, under the care of Mr. Gordon. You forget sir that your friend the Captain, had the benefit of the same instruction.'

'Which he has had the good sense to throw off,' rejoined Briar. 'Captain Allan's superior mind has seen the evil of it; I trust you will also ere long.'

'No doubt you are justified in expecting it,' retorted Walter. 'When you ply me with an argument such as you are using this morning, a fine of five hundred merks ought to produce moral conviction.'

'If it don't we shall not fail to repeat the dose,' laughed Allan, mockingly, as he counted over the gold pieces which Walter laid upon the table.

'Your business here being ended, you will do me the favour to rid my house of yourself your informant and your men,' said the laird coldly.

'No, no! I am not done with you yet. Our meeting of last night still requires to be settled for. Where is Hugh M'Kail?'

'What authority have you for putting that question to me?'

'Because he went off in your company, and doubtless he is here.'

'If you think so you are free to search.'

'You have concealed him then, and refuse to deliver him up,' cried Allan, with undisguised exultation. 'Very good. The crime will land you in another sweeping fine.'

He strode to the door, and exclaimed in a loud authoritative voice, 'Verner, you and Jackson remain at this door on guard. Richards, you and the other three will search the house for that rebel M'Kail. You know the reward offered for his apprehension. I have good reason to know that he is lurking here. Away and find him, and having found him bring him hither.'

Walter Elliot's high spirit chafed with indignation at this imperious insolence of Allan and it was with great effort that he restrained himself from treating the ruffian as his feelings prompted. But self-control had always been a virtue of his, and he was well aware that Allan's commission from tyrannical Government placed him in a position in which it was vain to withstand him, supported as he was by a dozen troopers, who would execute whatever order he gave them. He felt, therefore, that his wisest course was silence, and he resolved to keep that course till the enemy departed.

That resolution was one however which he was speedily destined to break, for Charlie presently unveiled a purpose regarding Marion which roused every passion in Walter's nature, and caused him in her defence to set all danger at defiance.

Chief of all the objects Allan had in visiting Birkencleuch that morning was to obtain possession of Marion, to carry her forcibly from the protection of his rival, and make her his own wife.

This purpose he now set himself to effect by the use of a power which, being itself an abuse, was all the more easily abused by one so unscrupulous and unprincipled as he.

A Great Lung Medicine.

There is one medicine which has been prepared for the cure of affections of the lungs, which has been very largely used and tested which we wish to recommend to the public for the reason that we can do it in all truth and sincerity, believing as we do, that it is not, and never has been surpassed for excellence and thorough efficiency. That medicine is "Allan's Lung Balsam." It is prepared by a chemical process and apparatus of more than ordinarily costly nature, and it is beyond all question a never failing and thoroughly complete cure for coughs and affections of the lungs, even when the latter are of a very serious and threatening character. One excellent physician goes so far as to state publicly over his own signature, that he has a perfect conviction that deep-seated pulmonary consumption has been cured by the use of Allen's Lung Balsam; and there are an abundance of the most respectable testimonials, that it has in numerable instances effectually cured very severe coughs of long standing, accompanied with cold chills, night sweats and diarrhœa—the system of the sufferer being in some cases very much prostrated. We do not hesitate to say, from our knowledge of the virtue of this balsam and from the entire confidence we have in the character of its proprietors, and the statement of certain citizens who have repeatedly used the medicine, that it is really one of the best things ever yet discovered for the cure of the particular maladies for which it is designed. We will only add, let every one who has an affection of the lungs, get a bottle of "Allen's Lung Balsam," and give it a fair trial. Having done this they will need no testimonials to convince them of its extraordinary merits.—PROVIDENCE ADVERTISER.

THOUSANDS OF PERSONS regard aperient pills as a species of medicine that destroy their own efficacy by repetition. In other words, they suppose that, however moderate may be the number taken at first, there is no escape from wholesale doses in the end. BRISTOL'S SUGAR COATED PILLS, however, are a grand exception—to this general rule. The doses are always moderate, four being the usual number of pills for an adult; and it is not necessary to continue them, in order to prevent a relapse. For constipation, sick and nervous headache, bilious disorders, chills and fever, stomach complaints, general debility, colic, and the irregularities of the female system, they are a specific cure. In all cases arising from, or aggravated by impure blood or humors, BRISTOL'S SARSAPARILLA should be used in connection with the Pills.

Guelph Markets.

MERCURY OFFICE, GUELPH, January 8, 1868.

The market for the past week has been much more lively than was its wont for a considerable time, and prices are very good for all kinds of grain. Fall wheat wheat comes in but slowly, yet somewhat better than formerly, and the price has considerably improved. Our quotations places it some ten cents higher than it was last week. The deliveries of Spring wheat are pretty large. Somewhere about seven thousand bushels have been on the market during the last two days. The price is some seven cents per bushel higher than it was last week. Barley is supplied at the rate of about a thousand bushels a day, and the price still keeps up. Oats are moderately supplied, peas very light, prices of both very slightly advanced. Pork is delivered to a very large amount. On Tuesday and Wednesday about 1,300 hogs were brought in and sold at good prices. The tendency in pork is slightly upward. Hay is abundantly supplied and is a little easier. Potatoes are few in quantity and sell at from fifty to sixty cents per bag.
