which appear to have been cut down below from any considerable part of New Jersey it can only be assumed that the State has gone Democratic on the Presidential ticket as usual. Connecticut is claimed with confidence in dispatches by both parties, but the returns thus far received appear to favor the Democrats. With New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, and four or five probable votes from Michigan, and a South made solid by fraud and a wholesale denial of the right of suffrage. Mr. Cleveland would have about 216 electoral votes, leaving only those of Indiana or Illinois to assure his election. At the present writing both Indiana and Illinois are claimed by both parties, but without sufficiently full returns to place the result in either State beyond doubt. It is not by any means certain that President Harrison has not secured the electoral vote of one or more Southern States. Cheering dispatches from Delaware give reason to hope that its three electoral votes will be for the Republican candidates. The returns from West Virginia are not complete enough to justify a positive claim according to such tidings as have come to hand thus far. The loss of either of these would leave Mr. Cleveland with not more than 207 electoral votes unless he has carried indiana or Illinois, and in that case the votes of Indiana alone would not suffice to elect him. Until more thal returns have been obtained from the four States named it is plain that the result will not be out of doubt. The result is equally uncertain is some States in which the Democratic party surrendered to the Populists, so that the only question is whether their electoral votes will be for President Harrison. If neither Illinois or Indiana have voted for Mr. Cleveland there may have been no election by the people, but sould the Democratic claim as to Illinois be confirmed by later dispatches the success of the Democratic ticket would be assured.
