Mr. Staunton admitted in the court that Miss Kinrade was acting under Instructions, and he made it plain that right to further cross-question the It is likely that the numerous trips of Miss Florence, especially her trips to the south, will furnish greater part of the groundwork of her cross-examination.

Both sides are apparently satisfied as to their position. Mr. Blackstock stated quite emphatically that the crown had the right to compel the girl to give evidence, and that the counsel for the family had no case whatever Staunton's Stand,

Mr. Staunton, on the other hand, is emphatic in his statement that the crown have far exceeded their authority, and that they can by no means compel Miss Florence to give further ing on the solution of the mystery her trip to the south can have

Miss Kinrade would not be present. It was thought that she would scarcely refuse to answer the crown's subpoena, and there was an eager crowd in the courtroom. As usual the public was rigidly excluded, but nevertheless the oom was more than comfortably filled. Every man was either a friend of a juryman or had a friend at court. There was a large crowd on the out side, clamoring to obtain admittance, as the expected reappearance of Miss Florence Kinrade on the stand had

A Brief Session.

The court proceedings last night were brief. The court room was filled before 8 o'clock, and the coroner and the jurymen were in their places. Mr. Staun and Mr. Hobson, attorneys for the Kinrade family, were on hand early, but gave no intimation whatever as to plans of their clients.

At 8:15 there were no witnesses to be seen, and a conference took place between Mr. Blackstock, Chief Smith, the coroner, and Detective Miller, Shortly afterwards Detective Miller came into the court room, and had & conversation with the jury. He made a proposition to them to have the girl arrested on Saturday morning, and then hold a short session at 2 o'clock, urther adjourning until Monday night. A number of the jurymen objected a Saturday session. Mr. Miller told Mr. Blackstock of this, and an ar-(Continued on Page Four.)

REFUSES TO INDORSE THE KINRADE WARRANT

Toronto, April 24. - Police Magistrate Denison this morning refused to indorse the coroner's warrant to arrest Florence Kinrade. The whole question of the legality of the warrant outside the coroner's own jurisdiction will be argued at Osgoode Hall Monday morning. Legal men here dispute the coroner's power to order an arrest. All that he can do is to impose a fine of $4. Detective Miller arrived this morning from Hamilton with the warrant. The house where the Kinrades are stopping on Sherbourne street is under surveillance.
