"There's No Time Like the Spring Time When the Baseball Skies Are Blue"

O the early spring is lovely with the music of the bird.

And the frost-bound heart by balmy breezes soothingly is stirred—
The flowers begin to blossom and the bess begin to hum,
And the gold hills in the distance cry to weary mortals, "come."
O, spring is very lovely, for the beauty that we see.
But there's another reason why it thrills with joy and glee—
You see it is the season when the pennant race is won
By every blooming baseball team beneath the laughing sun.

Just before the season opens, That's the lovely time of year; All the future wears a halo, Every heart is filled with cheer

All the sluggers hit three hundred, Every team can cop the bunting

In the good old pennant race. O, the early spring is lovely—as around the baseball camp. The players gather nightly—not a man has a "burn lamp." All the bushers look like bruisers—any they say they're "in the pin And every manager is sure he's found the missing link. He imagines that in August they'll be stealing second base. At the same time-breaking frenzy that they run to feed their face. He wires back to the mayor, "O, at last I sight the goal—Have all the boys turn out and build a brand new pennant-pole."

Just before the season opens. That's the time the gream is bright, Dancing in a hazy light. Every catcher pegs to second

For red flannel soaked in water never shrinks like baseball de Soon the bushers will be busted—nine time out of ten they pay More attention to their tapeworms than they do to diamond play One by one the mighty hurling arms of pitchers turn to glass, and the man who bragged of "headwork" soon displays a dome O, the lovely spring-time fancies fade along a leaden sky, For the February winners mostly wither in July.

But before the season opens Every team can cop the rag, The pure gold of expectation Is mixed with baser slag;
