Sulis, Mrs. S. J. Smith and Simeon Sulis. The reports from the different schools were received, that from the Smiths Cove Methodist showing that temperance and international bible reading were among the special features. Reports from Superintendents of departments brought word from the home temperance and elementary workers, all of which was very cheering. A round table conducted by Dr. Brown dealt particularly on supplemental lessons, and a resolution was adopted urging the different schools to take these lessons up. The evening session opened at 7.30 with President Ross Smallie in the chair. After devotional exercises led by Vice President W. B. Snow, the nominating committee presented its report as follows:—

CLEVER MANCHESTER BOY.

How Many Grown-Ups Can Take This Exercise in Spelling.

A Manchester schoolmaster the other day gave out the following as a dictation exercise. One of the boys got it all right with only three mistakes. We always had a high opinion of Manchester youngsters, and considering that this dictation test was something of which both master and boy should be proud. Schoolmasters in other parts of the country please copy.

"A much-maligned cobbler was a skilful gauger, who possessed a polymath disposition and drove a peonary wagon, using an alpenstock as an instrument of coercion to tyrannize over his donkey. He was a Galilean and a Sadducee, but phisical causers, diphtheria, and a bilious, intermittent erysipelas occasioned him annoyance.

"The gipsy with the obriquet of Sibil went into an ecstacy at seeing him measure some asaccharine tomatoes without either dyeing or singeing the ignitable queue that he wore; but he remarked that he would have preferred a wooden rickshaw.

"His choice was not referable to a vacillating, occasionally recurring, idiosyncrasy. Therefore he woefully gave utterance to the following apophthegm:

"Life is chequered, but schism, heresy, apostasy, and villainy shall be punished.

"The sibil, becoming paralyzed by haemorrhage, lifted her eyes to the cupola of the Capitol to conceal her unparalleled embarrassment, making him a rough curtsy, but not harassing him with mystifying, rarifying, and stupifying insinuations. She gave him a bouquet of fuchsia, mignonette and dahlias, and a portmanteau containing this heterogeneous collection: a treatise on pneumonics, an Apocrypha, a book of hieroglyphics, a lecture on Mendelssohn, a kaleidoscope, a drachm phial of ipecacuanha, a clarinet, a violoncello, a cornelian of symmetrical proportions, a daguerrotype, and a guitar.

"The gauger, who was, by the by, a trafficking rectifier and a parishioner, thanked her cordially. She apologized, answered:

"There are various degrees of wisdom, all problematically rateable, but none comparable to the syllogism existing between an eligible ellipsis and a trisyllabic diacresis."—Tit-Bits.

A Pugilistic Opera Singer.

Mr. John McCormick, the well-known English opera singer, is passionately fond of boxing. "It's the greatest sport in the world," he says. When Sam Hague and Langford met at the National Sporting Club a short time ago, Mr. McCormick was singing in "Rigolette" at Covent Garden. He was so interested in the fight that he made arrangements with the fireman to let him know how the fight was going. Mr. McCormick was singing when the fireman appeared after the first round and beckoned him to the wings. Mr. McCormick kept on singing, and backed across the stage where he could hear him without the audience knowing. "Hague was knocked down in the first round," whispered the fireman, hoarsely. Then he sped back to the ringside again.

"It so happened," says Mr. McCormick, "that every time he reached the wings I was singing, and we went through the same performance. Hague was knocked down five times in the second, half a dozen times in the third, and so often in the fourth and last round that everybody left the track of the number. All this was whispered to me between the acts, the knock-out coming appropriately enough during the last act, when Rigolette drags the sack containing the body across the stage." Mr. McCormick's sympathies were with Hague.
