The Twentieth Century GRINDER

FARMING

ILL be close at hand, before the last number of another volume of "FARMING" will be issued, and we intend to mark the end of the Nineteenth Century by greater efforts than ever to give our readers substantial value for their money. As announced in cur last issue, the initial number of our next' volume will be an exceptionally valuable and attractive one, and every one of the fifty-two (52) numbers of that volume will contain, at least, 16 pages, in addition to the cover, making 20 pages in all. This will enable, us to give more than twice as much reading matter during the year as we have given during the preceding one. Canadian farmers should also appreciate the fact that "FARMING" has no side issues. It is a purely practical farmers' paper, and we believe the only one in America which devotes its whole space to the technicalities of the farm. Other industries support many such publications. The agricultural industries only one. This strikes one as singular, considering the importance of the interests involved. But it is so, and "FARMING" occupies the unique position of being without a rival in its sphere of journalism. Can any progressive farmer afford to do without such a paper? We think not.
