For convenience, the book is divided into two parts. In Part I, (Food in Health) the needs of the body for different kinds of food, and the manner in which they are utilized, are explained. The principles of cooking and detailed descriptions of the different articles of food in common use are given, with chapters on the proper nourishment of infants, children, adults and the aged.

Part II, (Food in Disease) deals with the variations from the normal diet which are necessitated by the more common diseases, and includes a section on the general methods to be observed in feeding the sick, as well as special directions for nourishment in the different diseases.

Dr. Williams has furnished a book which has been wanted and which is perfectly adapted to the needs of physicians, students, nurses and the laity. It is decidedly an excellent book of its kind.

Messrs. Carveth and Co., Toronto, Agents.

It is not at all surprising to us that a fifth edition of Church and Peterson's work should be necessary. Indeed, such a success was to be expected from what is undoubtedly the most complete and authoritative volume on nervous and mental diseases to-day. In preparing this edition Dr. Church has carefully revised his entire section, placing it in accord with the most recent psychiatric advances. In Dr. Peterson's section—Mental Diseases—the Kræpelin classification of insanity has been added to the chapter on classification for purposes of reference, and new chapters on Manic-Depressive Insanity and on Dementia Præcox included. While the changes throughout have been many, they have been so made as but slightly to increase the size of the work. A number of the illustrations have been replaced by newer and better ones. We can confidently say that this work will maintain the reputation already won.
