THE ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT McKINLEY.

AS a rule we confine ourselves to matters of a purely professional character, but owing to the enormity of the crime just committed in the United States, by one who was evidently only the instrument of a dastardly and cowardly organization, owing to the splendid abilities and eminent statesmanship of the victim, owing to the high moral character and pure life of the martyred President, we cannot refrain from expressing our abhorrence of the heinous crime and from mingling our sorrow with that of the nation now so sorely afflicted. We feel that we cannot better express our estimate of the President than by
