

million deficit (includes indexed accrued supplementary retirement benefits).

*For consistency and comparability, notional assets in each case were valued at the assumed rate of interest. Moreover, the actuarial liabilities include reserves for salary increases until 1983, such that 1(a) may be compared with question 2,380 part 1, and 2(a) with question 2,380 (part 2(d)).

The premium included in the value of notional assets and the special reserve in each case were as follows:

	Premium on Assets	Special Reserve
1 (a) above	$879 million discount	$218 million
1 (b) and (c) above	$879 million discount	$347 million

2. Employer contribution rates expressed as percentage of effective employee contributions.

Assumptions as for	Employer Multiple*
1 (a) above	45 per cent
1 (b) and (c) above	110 per cent

*These figures are subject to modification when CPP/QPP contribution rates are increased above 3.6 per cent of contributory earnings.

**For comparability with question 2,380 part 2(c)(ii) and 2(d) and 3, it was assumed that employees contribute to the public service superannuation account a total of 7.5 per cent of salary less CPP/QPP contributions (i.e., including the 1 per cent supplementary retirement benefit contribution) and that all benefits are paid out of the account.

3. There does not appear to be any way to determine an amount equivalent to a reduction in the employer contribution rate into the indefinite future.

Note: The assumptions underlying these figures do not include the usual provision for promotional salary increases.
