

the stable duties, and see that they are properly performed by the men. The rooms and stables are under his superintendence, and he is responsible that they are kept clean and well ventilated.

ORDERLY TROOP SERGEANT-MAJOR.

Comes on duty at reveille. He will not absent himself from barracks except on duty. He will accompany the orderly officer when he visits the men's rooms, at meals and watch-setting, and going his round. He will visit the cook-houses and see that they are clean. He will go round all the troop stables and the veterinary stables between 2 and 6 p.m. and at about 10 p.m., and see that the horses are properly tied. He will see that the dung is removed from around the stables.

He will attend the veterinary surgeon at midday stables, and get any orders from him about ventilation, &c., and give them to the other troop sergeant-majors. He will attend at watch-setting and gather the reports, and hand them to the orderly officer. He will see the lights out and close the sergeants' mess.

TRUMPET-MAJOR.

Is responsible that the trumpeters understand their duties, and that the various duties are properly and punctually sounded ; all trumpeters fit for duty to sound noon stables, dinners and watch-setting.

He will keep a roster of trumpeters' duty.
