much attention both in scientific cir-cles and from the general public. Set forth by Darwin in the 'Origin of Spe-sics,' it has been largely developed in a series of interesting publications by Sir

Ghent. Professor Plateau has arrived at the conclusion that insects are indifferent to the colors of the flowers they visit, and that they are guided to them in a very subordinate way by sight. The experiments on which the Belgian professor bases his farreaching conclusions are briefly these: Having covered the brightly colored flowers of single dahlias in his garden with bits of green leaf, he found that they were still visited by insects. This seemed so much at variance with the generally received view that insects are attracted to flowers chiefly by their color that Professor Plateau instituted a prolonged series of experiments and observations to put the matter still further to the proof. The result has been to confirm and strengthen the conclusions drawn from the first experiments. Cutting off the brightly colored corollas of such flowers as lo belia, evening primrose, foxglove, etc., be found the remaining green parts were still visited. Again there are some brightly colored flowers which are seldom or never visited by insects owing to their lack of honey. Notable among these is the scarlet geranium of our gar-den. But when a little honey was placed on geranium flowers bees came to them at once, those blossoms which had not received honey being passed over. "Other conspicuous flowers were tried in a similar way with like results. The experiment of removing the honey bearing parts of a flower and leaving the brightly colored part, which was sup-posed to be attractive, was also tried with the single dablia. Its inner florets outer ones, a piece of yellow leaf being placed in the center. No insects went to these honeyless flowers. But as soon as a drop of nectar was placed on them they visited them as freely as before. Again, Professor Plateau made artificial flowers with pieces of green leaf, each furnished with a little honey. These were freely visited by insects. But artificial flowers made of colored material were neglected, even when supplied with honey.

"In further support of his views Professor Plateau is able to bring forward cause Ivan cannot spare the time to go out to work, and his really exemplary insects in visiting flowers: They will wife cannot do it all, though she does pass freely and with apparent indifference from one color to another of varieties of the same species growing together in our gardens; they visit a great number of green and greenish colored flowers; there are many small and inflowers; there are many small and inconspicuous flowers which are also freely visited. Such is a brief outline of Professor Plateau's observations and experiments, from which he believes himself justified in drawing the conclusion that sight plays a very subordinate part in attracting insects to flowers. Their Ivan, but it is quite certain that poor, bearing on the theory of the insect origin of flowers is obvious."-London Times. Worked the Wrong Way. Mr. Dooley, a Mobile ship carpenter, elates an amusing incident connected with the blockade of Mobile harbor during the civil war. Some ship carpenters had been put to work by the government to manufacture floating mines and had taken a number of heavy pieces of square timber and placed them in the form of a triangle, three pieces being used to each. At the end of each of the sticks-that is, on the three points-was placed a torpedo. A few days after this the wind came out strong from the north, and the torpedoes were taken and placed in position in the bay so that they would be driven by the wind against the United States gunboats. The plan was apparently to be successful, the torpedoes being driven rapidly in the direction of the enemy's gunboats, and great damage might have resulted to Uncle Sam's ships had not the wind suddenly changed, and the torpe-does were brought back and carried in a bunch to the bay opposite Frascati. Here the torpedo mines met in an eddy, and there was suddenly a great explosion, followed by another, and yet another, completely tearing the rafts to pieces and producing at the same time a panic among the people resident on the shore, who went to Mobile city and reported that the enemy was bombarding Frascati.

The Naval Captain In Battle. Writing of the perils of naval warfare, Park Benjamin in The Independent says: Nobody now believes that a captain who finds his vision through the slits of the conning tower cut off by smoke will stay thus shut up. It is extremely doubtful if it will be physically possible for him to remain there after the shells ommence to hammer its sides and burst against it, and in any event the intense anxiety to see and know clearly what the enemy is doing will inevitably lead him to take his chances in the open. Conning tower or no conning tower, his duty is to place himself at whatever point he can manage his ships to the best advantage, and this he will certainly do. Lord Charles Beresford, with grim humor, has suggested that the captain's safest place is not in but behind his conning tower, "because then he has two thicknesses of steel between himself and the enemy, don't you see?" But while coming tower armor may resist penetration it is by no means certain that the whole structure will not be swept away by the first heavy projectile which squarely hits it.

Electric Propulsion of Ships. Up to the present electricity has scarcely been thought suitable as the scarcely been thought suitable as the principal motive or propelling power for the larger type of vessels. This is undoubtedly owing to the fact that for a given horsepower a triple or quadruple expansion steam engine would take up less space and probably weigh less than an electrical installation of equal power. Storage batteries are out of the question for such uses, although persons not well up in electrical subjects frequently wonder why our ocean greyhounds are not propelled by some such method. It may interest some of our readers to know that a vessel requiring an average of 10,000 horsepower to propel it across the Atlantic, and displacing 5,000 tons, would be obliged to carry, were storage batteries alone made use of, 324,480,000 pounds of such batteries, or, in other words the motive power alone. other words, the motive power alone would weigh 162,240 tons, or 30 times as much as the ship. - Electricity. A teetotal lecturer at West Bromwich, in order to illustrate the horrors of drinking, told his audience a story of a wooden legged toper who was so drunk one night that he took off his wooden leg to wind the clock. The story was told in all simplicity by the lecturer as he had heard it in his childhood.

Strange to say, it applied exactly to the husband of a lady who happened to be the amount. You get a shave at your They Fertilize Plowers For Strictly Utillone of the audience. A Clever Draftsman. The slickest draftsman in our office at this kind of work is a little, dark complexioned fellow who sits in a corner and says never a word. He has a glass eye and three wooden legs. His name is Camera. He takes his cap off at a drawing for only a minute and says to the foreman: "I have made a more accurate copy than any tracer in the office could have done. Every line is exact, every circle is true and all your figures are correctly copied. If you are using your drawing for constant reference, I will only delay you a minute, and your copy will be ready for printing in an hour." Where the Pecan Grows. The pecan is a near relative of the hickory nut. It does not thrive in all lands that the hickory nut will, but the hickory nut will grow well wherever the pecan will. The home of the pecan is the low, rich bottom land that lies along the Wabash, Mississippi, White and Big Bend rivers, while they seem to grow equally as well in the Indian Territory and in the best watered parts

Made up complexions are on the increase in New York. The fashionable or would be fashionable New Yorker who does not today make up a little is a rare bird. A dab of rouge for evening has never been considered criminal by her, but she now uses it for daytime as well. As always happens when a habit becomes more universal, much of the present make up is very badly done. The few did it, as a rule, artistically, but the many lay it on with a heavy hand. Without wishing to go into the ethics of make up it is safe to say this —the fact that so much of it is done badly is one reason why we object to One must always have a sneaking ap-

Allen of Girard college: On one occasion a business matter called Mr. Allen to a small sown in the central part of the state. While sitting in the parlor of the country hotel in the evening after ransacting his business he was taken in hand by the wife of the proprietor, who was extremely inquisitive and wanted to know all about his private affairs. Mr. Allen took it all in good part and for a time was rather amused Finally she asked, "Have you got much of a family?' "Oh, yes," said he, and he smiled as his mind reverted to his hundreds of pupils. "How many children?" she persisted.

"Well," said Mr. Allen, with great earnestness, "I have 500 and all boys!"

The good old lady was speechless for a moment. Then she arose and hurrying to the door called to her husband: "Oh, John! Come in here! We've got Brigham Young stoppin with us! A London Lad's Prayer. W.
