

for Franklin, Ross ventured no more into polar seas.

His work was finished, and he had done it well ; and he could look back with pride upon a record which proved him a man bold and courageous, ready to dare and to do anything at the call of duty, for his country and for his fellow men.