There are some women who seem to be perennially youthful. The grown daughters are companions as well as children, and the color in the mother's cheeks, the brightness in her eyes, the roundness of her form, all speak of bounding health. What is her secret? She is in the middle age of life when so many women are worn, wasted and faded, and yet time has only ripened her charms. The secret of this marvellous health and beauty may be told in the brief phrase, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. The general health of woman is so intimately related to the local health of the delicate womanly organs, that where these are diseased, the whole body must suffer. "Favorite Prescription" dries the debilitating drains, heals ulceration and inflammation, cures female weakness and imparts to the delicate female organs natural vigor and vitality. Women who have lost their health and their beauty have been made "robust and rosy checked" by the use of this marvellous medicine.

FARMER'S HOMES

What Even the Scientist of Them May Be Made.

We often see in the papers almost glowing articles on farm life and farmers' lives. I wish to show how luxurious even the smallest farmer's home may be. If he and his wife are willing to work. One of the greatest dangers to our people and the working people all over our fair land to day, lies in always wanting to grasp the world and give nothing in return.

I am a farmer's wife, and was a farmer's daughter at a time when luxuries were rare things; when a barrel of apples was doled out to one by one; when we received our education in the old log schoolhouse, with slabs for a seat and another with the smooth side turned up served as a desk; when the Indian's wigwam was not a curiosity, and I ran many a day the way to school for fear I might meet the dusky occupant on his tramp; when I sat night after night filling the old candle moulds that we might have the wherewithal to light up through another year's evenings; the wild strawberries of the fields and the blackberries of the forests and the wild plums were our fruit, which were often put up in maple sugar for the next winter's supplies; therefore I think I can thoroughly appreciate the things of to-day, and I wish to indicate some of the things that can be raised on an ordinary farm, with the care that can be given by the family.

In the first place, with an ordinary hot bed, which anyone can build, you can have the most delicious radishes and lettuce for the table with asparagus and spinach are ready. Oftentimes, if one is near a small town, the surplus can be easily disposed of; I have often sold $50 worth of cabbage, and usually sell a sufficient quantity of strawberries to buy the fruit I cannot grow. Strawberries three times a day for weeks, with delicious cream and sugar—the very thought makes one long for spring. Then come raspberries, currants, gooseberries, cherries, grapes; then there is the honey of which a good part is stored for winter and the surplus sold to pay the expenses. These are what may be called the luxuries; then there are the eggs and poultry, the surplus from which will net a nice little amount for the maintenance of the family who will care for them—perhaps reaching into the hundreds if good care is taken.

Crows and Corn.
There are a number of ways of protecting corn from the depredations of crows. One of the simplest is to coat the seeds with tar. Place a half bushel of seed in a basket and pour on hot water enough to moisten and heat all the seeds; then immediately apply a pint of pine or coal tar and stir the whole rapidly for some time. Every seed will thus become coated with a quantity of air-slaked lime is then applied, it will render it dry and easily handled. The crows will pull up the plants to eat the seed, but coming in contact with the tarred seed, they are thoroughly disgusted with it, and the remainder will be untouched.

Another way is to stretch white twine zigzag across the field. The crows will not touch the plants fenced in on two sides or within an angle. Other ways follow:

Employ a man with a dollar's worth of shot to stay in the field all the time for a few days, and the crows (which are left) will decamp to pastures new.

As soon as corn is planted, take a bushel of corn, put it into some vessel (not iron), pour on water enough to cover the corn, and pour it off into a tin-pail, then measuring it; then take 50 cents' worth of strychnine and stir it into the water until well mixed. Pour the water back on the corn and let it stand 24 hours, stirring occasionally. Sow this mixture in the proper rows (more needed for larger territory). This way is of course not to be tried if hens or sheep have access to the field.

The use of steel traps; put a hen's egg near each trap and cover traps with grass or leaves.

A way that will not hurt the crows is to set up a pole 6 or 8 feet high; attach a strong cord to the upper end two or three feet long; to this fasten a good-sized piece of sheet tin. Wind and air will keep the tin in motion (more so if the pole is set in a proper leaning). The flashes and bangs of the tin striking on the pole are better than any scare-crow.—Country Gentleman

Water in Butter.

Properly made butter contains not more than 15 per cent. of moisture, and 13 1/2 per cent. is near the proper quantity. Anything more than that should be considered as not having been worked sufficiently, and is unfit for shipping or long keeping. If we have a standard for pure butter, we declare that it shall have a certain amount of total solids or of butter fat, we may also demand that there shall be a certain amount of butter fat in butter, not less than 85 per cent. If large drops of moisture appear when the butter is cut it indicates insufficient working, and though it may be all right in flavor while new it will quickly lose that flavor and almost as quickly acquire another, which is not so pleasant to the taste. If the drops have a milky color it is even worse than when the moisture looks like pure, clean water. Butter may have the buttermilk washed out of it, when this is done the water should be afterwards worked out of it.

Ventilating Poultry Houses.

In proportion to the size fowls require more fresh air than any other animal, but in cold weather this pure air must be supplied in such a way that the fowls will not take cold. The house should be warm and all cracks through which the wind might come should be tightly closed, the ventilation being supplied through some opening near the roof that it may be shut off when necessary. In the majority of cases the best point from which to ventilate is the roof, when possible, but in the coldest weather the ventilation is best supplied through some opening near the floor. The fowls can readily protect their feet from cold by roosting, but the head, the part most open to attack of diseases if cold weather, cannot be so easily protected from draughts.

Anecdotal.

Payne, an examiner at Cambridge University, whose questions were always of a peculiarly exasperating nature, once asked a student at a special examination to "give a definition of happiness." "An exemption from Payne," was the reply.

James Cobb tells a curious story of a lady, a sister of Owen Tudor, who, like Henry VIII, was greatly given to marriage. She was married to a nobleman, and did not die until she had been led seven times to the altar. When she was following her fourth husband to the grave, the gentleman behind whom she rode on horseback ventured to urge his suit. "Unhappily," said the dame, "I am art too late, seeing that I am plighted already; yet do not lose heart, for, should it fall out that I have again to perform this melancholy office, I will bear thee in mind."

An old Scotchman, named Robert Gordon, was seriously ill and had been wheeled into making a will by a crowd of greedy relatives. The paper had been drawn up, and lacked only the signature. The sick man was propped up in bed, and a pen was put into his hand. He managed to write "Robert Gordon," and then fell back, exhausted. A nephew seized the pen and offered it to him again. "D. Uncle Robert, d!" he urged, referring to the next letter of the signature. The old man's eyes snapped. "Dee!" he growled. "We haint had no hogs sense you went away last September."

A well-known professor, having boarded a few weeks with a farmer, who was in the habit of taking a few summer guests into his house to help pay the rent, decided to spend his vacation there again this year. In notifying the farmer of his intentions, he wrote: "There are several little matters that I desire changed, should my family decide to pass the vacation at your house. We don't like the maid Mary. Moreover, we do not think a sty so near the house is sanitary." This is what he received in reply: "Mary has went. We haint had no hogs sense you went away last September."

When the President's special train, during his recent tour of the West, reached Nebraska, Governor Mickey joined the party to escort the President to the State Capitol. The President was delighted to meet the governor of Nebraska, and asked him about a hundred questions—political, industrial, social and personal—winding up with: "How many children have you, governor?" "Nine," answered the Governor. "You are a damn good man," exclaimed President Roosevelt; "you are a better man than I am. I have had only six." And Governor Mickey, who is a Methodist elder, gasped with astonishment.

The oratorical gift of the preachers of Missouri is well known. One of the most admired by their simple parishioners. In fact, nearly every youth's ambition, it is said, is to be a preacher, although it is an affliction among the horny-handed portion of the population to pretend to despise those who do not engage in manual labor. A traveler recently asked a bright-eyed youngster in Tennessee: "What are you going to do when you grow up?" The boy turned his head away, blushed with embarrassment, and answered: "I am going to be a preacher, like my father." "You are a better man than I am," said the traveler, "I have had only six." And Governor Mickey, who is a Methodist elder, gasped with astonishment.

George Meredith recently said of a brilliant and beautiful leader of English society: "She did not merely shuffle the cards; she was one of the pack." An earlier leader, Lady Holland was not one of the pack, to borrow his phrase, and she was inclined to shuffle her cards—which included princes, peers, politicians and poets—with more or less flourish. She exacted homage; she pleased her to see distinguished men fetch and carry in her drawing-room. It was one of her little habits to drop her handkerchief for someone to pick up and return to her on bended knees. One evening a dinner at Holland House, when she had dropped her handkerchief three times in close succession, Count D'Orsay admitted it to her the third time saying: "Pray, my lady, had I not better take my seat under the table?"

When Lord Lyons was the English ambassador to the United States, he gave difficulty over the Mason and Slidell case arose. Lord Lyons was instructed from home to present an ultimatum, afford twelve hours for its acceptance, and the latter not being forthcoming he was to break off relations and leave the country. The twelfth hour expired Slidell and Mason were not surrendered and there remained, apparently, only the dire prospect of war. "Give me another twelve hours," said Seward, the Secretary of State. It was an entire contradiction of official orders, but, nevertheless, "I will," said Lyons. From six o'clock that night until six the next morning Seward battled with the real citrants. Then Lyons received an intimation that the Confederate envoys would be given up. So by the insubordination of an ambassador war was avoided.

"The other day on a train coming into New York," said Lew Dockstader, "I met a young man, who was introduced to me as Dr. Blank, and after some conversation with him I said: 'What kind of a doctor are you? Medical, teeth or feet?' 'Why,' said he, 'to tell you the truth, Mr. Dockstader, I'm not a regular doctor yet, but I'm following the medical profession.' 'Oh,' said I, 'you haven't graduated yet,' and the entire incident passed from my mind until a few weeks later I attended the funeral of an acquaintance, and whom should I see handing out camp chairs to the mourners, but my friend, the doctor. After the last sad rites I approached him, more in sorrow than in anger. 'Doctor,' I said, 'you led me to believe that you were a medical student, didn't you?' 'No, Mr. Dockstader, I did not. I told you I was following the medical profession, and I am I'm an undertaker.'"
