Colquhoun, who left Brantford less than two years ago, a captain and had now returned lieutenant-colonel had now returned lieutenant-colonel, and, more, bearing the D.S.O., the most coveted of British distinctions, awarded at the First awarded at the King's own hands. The speaker went on to point out the enormity of the present struggle, and the need for all available men.
"A man's life is not measured in years," explained Col. Cockshutt;
"the true measure of life is what has been accomplished. All who man has been accomplished. All who go to the front do not die, but if they must do so, in what better cause could they lay down their lives. The present crisis is a time for sacrifice as never before. The result of the war will not all be evil; thousands upon thousands of us will derive from it faith stronger than before; we shall learn to know sacrifice and service as we had not done in the

Should the cause of the Allies fail, continued the speaker, it would mean setting back the wheels of progress 300 years. All must unite to keep burning the lights kindled by our forefathers, the lights which had blazed and given light all down the shores of time. The speaker made a plea for soldiers missing and prisoners of war, that they should be remembered in prayers in no less The Results of Failure
