RUSSIA'S SALT LAKES.

Vast Territory Containing Many Rich Deposits Easily Worked.
Salt lagoons and lakes are distributed over most parts of the Russian empire, and principally in the region of the Black and the Caspian Seas. The production of salt is one of the rapidly-developing industries of the country. In the salt lagoons during the dry and warm season there may be found the natural evaporation, which is so great that from the oversaturated brine great quantities of crystals of salt are precipitated. These salt lagoons, marshes or lakes give annually as much as 1,000,000 tons, although they have been known to yield 1,500,000 tons when seasons have been particularly dry and warm.
Such work is done principally in the provinces of Taurida, Kherson and Astrakhan. The Bageunchak Lake, located within the last-named province, gives in favorable seasons enormous quantities, sometimes nearly 600,000 tons. The bottom of this lake consists of thick layers of salt, and the visible supply has been computed at nearly 100,000,000 tons.
Another lake, the Elton, contains a larger reserve of solid salt along its bottom, measuring 40 square miles. Beginning not far from the Sea of Azov, embracing all the north and east of the Caspian Sea, and extending to the east and northeast of this, is a vast territory, larger in area than France, in which every lake and standing pool of water is brackish or salt, and only running water is fresh.
Hundreds of these lakes could be profitably worked for salt if required, says the Chicago Tribune. Many of the lakes contain besides common salt other compounds embedded in the brine or embedded in the sediments of their bottoms. These compounds are valuable in homeopathy.

THE WEATHER.

FORECASTS—Winds increasing to strong breezes and gales, easterly; showers to-night and on Sunday.
WEATHER NOTES.
Pressure is very high in the western provinces and in the St. Lawrence valley while the southwest depression mentioned yesterday is spreading towards the lake region. Winter weather continues in the western provinces. Cautionary signals are displayed at lake stations.
Washington, Nov. 13.—Eastern States and Northern New York—Rain to-night or Sunday, except generally fair in extreme south portion; cooler to-night in east portion; moderate northeast to east winds.
Western New York—Rain to-night and Sunday.
Lower Lakes—Increasing east winds, rain to-night and Sunday; colder Sunday on western Erie.
