PROSPECTUS OF A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER, TO BE ENTITLED "THE CONCEPTION-BAY MAN."

THE Subscriber intends publishing a Weekly Newspaper at Harbor Grace, in Conception-Bay, about the last of the ensuing month of July.

It is unnecessary for him to make any observations upon the convenience and usefulness of a Local Journal in so populous and wealthy a district as that of Conception-Bay. That is admitted by every one. But it is necessary to state the political principles which shall guide such a Journal.

1st.—The Conception-Bay Man, shall be a strong advocate for the perpetuation of the true principles of Responsible Government.
2ndly.—Equality of political rights and privileges among all religious creeds.
3rdly.—We shall maintain Native Rights above all other, when character and qualification are equal.

4thly.—This Journal shall be the strenuous advocate, first, of the Fisheries—next of Agriculture.

5thly.—It shall in all matters of local interest, maintain a perfectly independent course.

Its Motto shall be TRUTH.
"Truth ever lovely since the world began,
The Foe of Tyrants and the friend of Man."

We shall attack no party unless we ourselves are assailed—we shall enunciate our views of Constitutional Responsible Government and if these views be not in accordance with the views of others, we shall endeavor to defend them in the spirit of free discussion—but no interest shall cause us to blink the grand end of responsible rule—
"The greatest happiness of the greatest number."

We shall endeavor by every means in our power to make the Conception-Bay Man an interesting weekly visitor, a political Instructor to the rising genius of the colony, and a welcome moral miscellany.

As an advertising medium it will offer great advantages, circulating as it will a few hours after publication among a population of upwards of 50,000 people.

The price of the Conception-Bay Man will be fifteen shillings, per annum, half in advance.

It will be published on a demy sheet, and will contain sixteen columns.

The first number will be generally distributed, and those who feel desirous to support the establishment of a newspaper in Conception-Bay, by becoming SUBSCRIBERS, will please notify the undersigned now, or after they shall have received the first number, their intention of doing so, and to whom all correspondence must be addressed.

We are promised considerable support in St. John's, and anticipate nothing like disappointment.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

FRANCE IN DANGER.

(From the News of the World.)

The state of France is a subject of much anxiety in the political world. A financial crisis is expected; "the cloud which was at first no bigger than a man's hand is now assuming colossal proportion, and, unless it drift away to leeward, and expend a portion of its fury elsewhere, we shall see some of the oldest houses, which are supposed to be built on rocks, shaken from their foundations and toppled headlong." Concurrently with the fall in public securities and the increase in the rate of discount by the Bank of France, we receive unfavourable accounts of the state of trade. This is the time when shopkeepers pay in their stock for the winter; but accounts state that "they find it necessary to limit their orders, and only purchase the articles strictly indispensable for their winter assortments." Germany, which is entirely drained of specie, has sent few or no orders; and its manufacturers require to be paid in silver coin for all the articles purchased from them. The same causes which paralyze the internal trade are likewise injurious to exportation. The circumstances to which this disorder is attributable are not apparent on the face of it. We must look further to discover them, and they may not elude our search.

By some persons, the unsatisfactory condition of the health of the Emperor is supposed to be a sufficient cause for alarm, but there is reason to believe the Emperor was never better than he is at the present moment. The gossip that was got up at Plombieres about an alarming state of gout had no better foundation than the stories now in circulation about the home sickness of the Empress, which is said to have increased during the Imperial stay at Biarritz. The fact is that France has fallen into the condition of a fast-going man, who suddenly pulls up on discovering himself to be on the verge of insolvency. The Emperor of the French has dedicated himself to the accomplishment of a scheme of surpassing domestic grandeur, which the resources of the nation are unequal to, drained as they have been for the purposes of the recent war. And besides the financial difficulty which now stares him in the face, he has to encounter the operations of those secret societies which are known to exist in France, but which the police, with all their ingenuity, are unable to trace to their source. France is unsafe, because there are assassins prowling about the palaces, intent upon the destruction of the one man who holds all the power of government in his hands. It was a great design to employ the labouring classes, which might else have become dangerous, upon public works of a grand and beneficial character, but such an expedient could only procure a temporary safety, the ability of the tax-payers not keeping pace with the Imperial decrees that are issued. It was good policy, no doubt, on the part of Louis Napoleon to administer to the national love of glory, as well in the improvement of his capital as in the conduct of the war, and so long as the public means were equal to his demands, the course which he pursued was safe. In the brilliancy of the capture of the Malakhoff, and the final attempt upon Sebastopol, the France people lost sight of the cost of those achievements, or did not care for it; being content with the sacrifices demanded of them, on account of the feathers which it obtained wherewith to plume their, in this case, justifiable pride. But the war is over; there are no more Sebastopols to be taken, no more laurels to twine round their heads, no more congratulations to be exchanged, no more embraces to be made, for glorious success in arms; and each individual turns now to the state of his funds or his ledger, and is dismayed at the spectacle which is there presented. He also knows that there are assassins abroad, dogging the steps of the Emperor, whose stroke might throw all France into a state of confusion and anarchy.

Of the diabolical principles of the "Marianne," the name by which the most formidable of the association of assassins now menacing France is known, there cannot be two opinions among clear-headed and honest-hearted men. Neither France nor the members of the Marianne themselves could benefit by the removal of the Emperor by violence. The partisans of Napoleon are numerous, and a stern effort would be made, in the event of his death, to secure the throne for his son. And that failing, there would be other claims, each armed with considerable authority, and all, perhaps, eventually combining for the overthrow of the dynasty of the pistol and the dagger, should sanguinary power succeed for a time in obtaining an ascendancy. The "democratic and social republic," which French fanatics have set their hearts upon, and are willing to wade through blood to, is a delusion; as one might have supposed all Frenchmen had discovered by this time. If it had possessed any vitality, it would have succeeded after the throne was declared vacant by the flight of Louis Philippe. The doctrine of communism is opposed by common sense, by common justice, and the universal right of man to keep whatever he has honestly become possessed of. The idle man and the drunkard would never be permitted to share the earnings of the sober and industrious man. The heads of the possessors of property might be struck off by the terrible "Marianne" (a nick name for the guillotine), and their wealth divided among many, but the latter themselves would quarrel over the spoil, and guillotine one another; for the natural spirit of acquisition would render some of them liable to the reproach of aristocracy, and bring them to the block. It would be impossible for any security for life to exist where the right was admitted to get rid of an obnoxious person by a bullet or a stab.

It is a painful reflection that France should be subjected to such dangers. Whatever may be pronounced, as to the means whereby Louis Napoleon obtained the throne, there can be no doubt of the great and statesmanlike qualities which his rule has developed, and of his desire for the advancement
