The New Greece.

The military campaign of 1917 has been so entirely a western one, if the Italian front can be correctly included in that description, that attention has been distracted for long from the other theatres of war. But as the fighting year draws to a close, the world is reminded by one hint and another of the existence in other regions of large armies which will not always allow the western Allies an undisputed monopoly of battles. The latest such hint comes from Greece, of which, since Constantine's abdication, little has been said and not much more thought. A message to-day tells of conditions there which are more than encouraging, conditions which justify the expectation of developments of the first magnitude in a sector of the war which has not yet attained the importance that inherently belongs to it.

We shall not know until after the war exactly what was the scope of the Allies' plans for the past summer, and whether it included an attack in Macedonia, a drive northward in conjunction with a drive southward by the Roumanians. It is reasonable to assume that it did, and that the unforeseen collapse of Russia, which upset the whole plan, has not been the cause of this venture, so much dependent upon Russian co-operation. There are now many evidences of Russian recovery, the best of which are the steadiness of the army and a gradually emerging political harmony. If we can build upon them the assurance that Russia will next year simply hold firm, what are the prospects of Allied victory in the campaign of 1918? They are certainly very bright. They involve, moreover, considerations of what is likely to happen in this corner of the world, where nothing of importance has happened for so long.

The best opinion inclines to the belief that the Russian failure has proved of less benefit to Germany, than to Austria, of less detriment to Britain and France than to Italy, which has had to face nearly the whole Austrian army in the Isonzo and Carso. What Cadorna has done in spite of such opposition suggests what he might have done with Russia effectively aiding him. But if Russia can next year prove strong enough merely to hold Austria to her eastern defences the effective aid should come at last from the other quarter, Macedonia. General Sarrail has his Saloniki army, the size of which is not well known but probably exceeds 200,000. He will be greatly reinforced by the Italian army in Albania. He will have no dagger at his back, but instead a friendly and enthusiastic ally. And he will have the very efficient Greek army, which will have had nearly a year for quiet preparation and has been practically mobilized since the beginning of the war. He will have against him a war-sick Bulgaria and an Austria which will have enough to do to keep her western defences intact, if not her eastern as well. And Maude and Allenby can be relied upon to keep the Turk busy in his own dominions. It is not likely that anything premature will be attempted. When the Allies decide to strike in Macedonia it will be under conditions that will allow them to strike tremendously hard. These will not offer this year, for Russia must supply many of them. But whenever it may be, the enemy will be hit in a vital spot. Greece may yet prove the valuable ally she could have been two years and more ago.

A Dream that Came True.

A fourteen year old girl, who was engaged as a domestic in an uptown residence, was arrested last night for stealing a watch from her mistress. At first she denied the charge; she was searched, but without avail. She was locked up in a cell for the night and this morning on awakening confessed her guilt to the police, by voluntarily stating that she had a dream last night and dreamt she stole the watch and put it in a trunk in the room of her employer. The house of the latter was visited this morning by Constable Whelan and the "ticker" found in exactly the same spot as described by the girl. She then said she was sorry she didn't have the sleeping vision the night previous, as it would have saved herself an unpleasant experience and kept her character stainless. This morning she was tried before Judge Morris and convicted. After being severely lectured she was let go on suspended sentence; it was also ordered to have the girl sent to her home in a nearby outpost. She will go by this evening's train.

All About a Dog.

The Central District Court was occupied the greater part of this forenoon in the hearing of a suit preferred against an automobilist by a barber. The latter had a valuable setter dog run over by the defendant in July last and seriously injured. The main point of argument in the case was whether or not the dog was well trained and as to whether it is totally disabled as a result of the accident. Several witnesses were examined, including a veterinary surgeon, who treated the dog for a couple of weeks. Judgment was reserved. Mr. Hunt appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. Higgins for the defendant.

Newfoundlander Wins M. C.

We notice in a list of Canadian Officers who have recently been presented with the Military Cross, the following item:—"our own lads from British Harbour, but who lived some years in St. John's:—"Lieut. Arthur Richard Batson. He made a daring reconnaissance over fire-swept ground."
 Lieut. Batson was so seriously wounded some time ago that it was thought he would be unfit for further active service, but we are pleased to see he has evidently entirely recovered.

Story About a Statue.

London Daily News: The inner history of the Cromwell statue at Westminster was rather funny. Lord Gladstone was then—1895—First Commissioner of Works, and thought that we ought to have a statue of the Protector at Westminster, to keep company with the Kings. He was supposed to be the one member of the Government who "understood the Irish"—but he understood them so little that he did not realize their abhorrence of Cromwell. When the vote for the statue came on he was amazed to find that the Irish members opposed it, and, as they had no majority to spare, the Government would have been defeated; but Arthur Acland was put up to withdraw the proposal. When this was reported Lord Roseberry, who always had only "an imperfect sympathy" with the Irish, offered to pay for the statue anonymously. Even then the Irish were not satisfied; and Tim Healy closed the incident by saying that, as he understood that the Cromwell was to be "put into a kind of ditch," he had no more objections to offer.

Distinguished Doubles.

Mr. Winston Churchill has a double, who, when last heard of, was a waiter in a Plymouth hotel, while Lord Charles Beresford also possesses a double in a waiter who is his exact counterpart. As a matter of fact, we probably all have doubles somewhere or other. King Edward had quite a number, and it has been said that the resemblance was encouraged, and that the occasional cheering and playing of the National Anthem were enjoyed immensely. King George and the ex-Czar of Russia are much alike, and there is a gentleman in Massachusetts who is exactly like Colonel Roosevelt, even to the teeth and the smile.

So close was the resemblance between Mr. Gerald Du Maurier, the popular actor, and the late Sir Lawrence Alma-Tadema, that at a dinner party one night a lady addressed Du Maurier as "Sir Alma," and assured him that he was "really, not a bit like that Mr. Du Maurier, as people make out."—Tit-Bits.

Reduce House Temperatures.

New York Sun: The fuel administrator suggests that as a measure of economy in the use of coal Americans reduce the temperature of their houses at least five degrees this winter. The American standard of artificial heating is commonly said to be about 70 degrees Fahrenheit, and this is true of Canada. The English standard is 62 degrees. The complaints of Englishmen in America of overheated houses and the jets of Americans in England at the chilliness indoors are well worn stories. Climatic differences make identical heating standards unlikely and even undesirable. Yet American houses are frequently kept too hot, and not with a temperature of 70 degrees but 72 or 75 degrees. When Mr. Garfield urges a general reduction of five degrees in the temperature of the average home he asks us to bear no hardship or even discomfort. Most medical authorities would enthusiastically endorse his suggestion on grounds of health alone.

THE CAPTAIN'S "COMPANY."

(From the Greenville News.)
 This story has been floating around through Camp Sevier. Over at Camp Wadsworth, which is said to be near a town named Spartanburg, there is a captain who is a splendid soldier, but whose early education was neglected, through force of circumstances. He is a fine man in every way, but the defects in his education sometimes cause him to make serious blunders. Not long ago, as the story goes, he met some people in Spartanburg who desired to show him social attention. He received a note which read this: "Mr. and Mrs. Blank request the pleasure of Captain Dash's company at dinner next Sunday." The captain, after much labor, wrote a reply which ran like this: "Captain Dash's company accepts with pleasure your kind invitation to dinner next Sunday. Captain Dash regrets that he cannot accompany his men, as he will be out of town that day."

Opening Session

IMMENSE MEETING AT LEGE HALL — DISCOURTERS ADDRESS TOGETHER — HUNDREDS GET IN.

One of the largest ever held in the history of the province has filled the spacious hall of the Legation. Precisely at eight o'clock the Governor accompanied by Mayor Gosling and a number of the members of the Executive Council on Tucker, Bolt and Saunders, Dr. Moore, Shearer, Blundell, Curtis, Rev. Mr. Salmon and the Rev. Mr. Salmon, the Newfoundland Methodist pastor, and upon the stage were Revs. Dickie, Clayton, Pike and other members of the National Anti-Slavery Society, including the Lord's Prayer, and Rev. Mr. Davidson, who had been invited to preside, and the immense audience of the people of St. John's and of the surrounding districts. The speakers were chosen by the respective societies, and the meeting was a most successful one. The Rev. Mr. Davidson opened with a prayer, and then he addressed the assembly. He spoke of the many virtues of the Lord's Prayer, and said that it was the best thing that God has ever given to man. He said that the Lord's Prayer was the best thing that God has ever given to man, and that it was the best thing that God has ever given to man. He said that the Lord's Prayer was the best thing that God has ever given to man, and that it was the best thing that God has ever given to man. He said that the Lord's Prayer was the best thing that God has ever given to man, and that it was the best thing that God has ever given to man. He said that the Lord's Prayer was the best thing that God has ever given to man, and that it was the best thing that God has ever given to man.

Mr. Gosling in welcoming the members of the Social Service, St. John's, said that the meeting that evening was the inauguration of a Social Service, to which he invited members from all over the province, as well as the district from Canada and the United States. He informed that no less than 100 Churches and Charitable Societies of Canada had bandaged together for Social Service, and that the delegates to the convention were held periodically in this city. The gentlemen kindly came so far from home, were men of means, and particular branches of the service to our fellow workers. He believed that it was able to account for the vast of far more than the prayer one said. Social Service workers himself. Because the government touched in hundreds.

Yours faithfully
