Enemies of Freedom

Time and again in our history there have been popular movements which have had for their object the remedying of some evil, the redressing of a grievance, or the lightening of a burden which rested more heavily on one class or section of the community than on another, and in every case where the demands were actuated by the inborn hatred of tyranny in any form and the desire to secure full rights and privileges as citizens, it has ultimately succeeded in its object. Further, to the lasting credit both of the claimants and the rulers of the day, it was not by bloodshed and revolution that the people came into their own, but by the practical, common sense methods which are characteristic of the race and by a recognition of the justice of their claims.

Thus has been built up the Constitution which we are privileged to enjoy, and which it is our right and responsibility to safeguard and pass down intact to our children. Trace its development from the earliest days through the various reform measures by which it is buttressed, and we find that the sole aim and object of our forefathers has been to secure that FREEDOM which, as some one has said, "Broadens down from precedent to precedent."

Those builders whose efforts were inspired by this lofty spirit may easily be distinguished from others, who, prompted by a craving for notoriety, or by a feeling of hostility towards all institutions representative of law and order, have from time to time raised the standard of revolt and have sought by every means possible to secure adherents to their cause. Always in a community are to be found persons of a warped mentality, others who from some obscure cause labour under a grievance, others to whom the vehement eloquence of the demagogue appeals far more strongly than the logic or veracity of his utterances, and others again—objects of pity rather than of censure—who are easy victims because of their ignorance or weakness of character. From such as these the self-styled saviours of the people secure their following, and reinforced by a sprinkling of undesirables, they undertake a crusade to reconstruct the whole of society.

Destruction of the established institutions is with them an obsession, and their plans for the future governance of the country, if considered at all, have no real foundations. At the present time the most active agents of destruction are best known as Communists, although, as it suits their plans, their identity is very often concealed under other pseudonyms. In the same way they hide their real intentions under various cloaks. "All experience shows," says the Montreal Gazette, "that they have a satanic gift of making their very crimes look like virtues. They can juggle the issue of just claims, can turn a plausible argument to the basest of uses, can construe their wild lust as moral instinct in an original form. Nobody can 'dollar up' a vicious cause to better advantage when they proceed to stain the Laborite banner blood-red."

Fortunately for the countries inhabited by people of British stock, the soil is not receptive to the seed of anarchy and sedition. Even now Labour in Great Britain has shown its abhorrence of the tactics of the extremists, and the attitude of the United States towards one of their leaders in refusing him admittance to their country cannot but have a healthy effect generally.

 A man for driving without lights was fined $2.00.
 A truckman for not driving his horse as close to the curb as possible, was convicted and fined $1.00. A similar charge, laid against another driver, was dismissed, as there was no evidence against him.
 The Board of Liquor Control had a man and a woman from Bay Bulls before court this morning, charged with committing a breach of Section 22, of the Alcoholic Liquors Act, that is, exposing and offering for sale beer overproof. The evidence showed that in both cases the police had seized a sample of the brew, and upon being analyzed, one contained 5.3 per cent, and the other 3.2 per cent, of alcohol by volume. As it was the defendants' first conviction under the Act they were allowed to go on suspended sentence and pay costs. The woman promised His Honor that she would keep the beer below the standard in future, while the man vowed that he would give up the sale altogether.

PEPYS BEHIND THE SCENES.

Sept. 17th.—Talking this day with Rumball, that is greatly interested in matters of education, and discourses with me of the Junior College, which to tell the truth, I know mighty little of. He talks very learnedly, albeit much of it above my poor head, but he do make me understand how this College must either fail or become a university in time, being that there is no halfway course. But he in the very highest hope of a Newfoundland University in the course of a few years.

My wife tells me she has a new cookie mayd coming this day, which do trouble me that she may not cook as well as Mary Ann, being to my mind, none that is her equal. But Lord, I do suppose 'tis a matter to be thankful for that one may obtain a cookie at all in these desperate times. Home all this night, and do suffer 'twixt rheumaticks which methinks is how I pay for my swim of yesterday.

Court on Northern Circuit

Northern Circuit Court, presided over by Mr. Justice Kent, which returned a couple of days ago, had a fairly busy session. At Grand Falls a preliminary enquiry into an indecent assault allegation was held. At Twillingate two young men, Froud and Wheeler were each sentenced to one year's imprisonment for indecent assault. A 15-year-old girl was the principal witness. The cases were tried before special juries and verdicts of guilty were returned after a half hour's deliberation. Mr. J. A. Parsons was Crown Prosecutor, and Mr. A. King defended. At Fogo, a civil matter in relation to an estate, Mahoney vs. Mahoney, was disposed of. Rex vs. Street for malicious damage to the public wharf at Spiller's Cove, occupied the attention of the Court at Bonaville. The Grand Jury, after three hours' deliberation could find no bill and the accused was dismissed. Mr. R. A. Parsons accompanied the Court as Crown Prosecutor.

Colonel Renouf Retires from the Canadian Militia With the Full Title of Colonel A Sketch of His Career.

(For the Evening Telegram.)

In retiring from the Canadian Militia a few weeks ago, in which he had served long, well and with marked distinction for nearly 30 years, Lieutenant-Colonel Edward M. Renouf, conferred upon him by the Dept. of Military, Ottawa, the full title, rank and honors of Colonel for services rendered to country and the empire.

As a military man, the Colonel left a record that will not soon be forgotten. Loyal and true to his duties, ready at a moment's call, he instilled into those under his charge the spirit of devotion and enthusiasm. His kindly spirit of generosity was at all times exemplified, when for years at the camping time, he paid his officers and men the full amount of their daily wages what they were receiving in their different avocations in the city, over and above the Government allowance while the men were under canvas at Petawawa. This extra money he drew from his own private resources. The salary allotted him from the Militia Department was always turned over to his Regiment.

Colonel Renouf was educated at the Church of England Academy, now Bishop Field College. He came to Montreal from St. John's, Newfoundland, in September 1889, and entered the publishing house of Dawson Bros.

In 1888 he acquired control of their uptown branch, and in 1898 he disposed of it, and then established the present Renouf Publishing Company, his brother J. J. Renouf being associated with him.

The publications of this firm have a wide distribution in universities and schools throughout the Dominion and the United States. His firm represents in Canada several English and United States publishing houses. He married Edith Outram Sanderson in 1900. He had two sons, Rex Outram deceased; Edward T., a graduate in Applied Science McGill University and member of the firm of La Societe Generale de Ponts et Chaussees Ltée. In 1904 and 1905 built the first fire proof office building in the uptown district of Montreal, corner of St. Catherine and University Streets, which he sold to the Merchants Bank of Canada a few years ago.

He was president, vice-president and director of a number of industrial companies and railways in the United States, also road construction and bridge building and other concerns. He had extensive holdings in commercial real estate in the centre of the uptown district, the present Prince of Wales Hotel, situated on McGill College Avenue being one of his properties.

He was Governor of the Diocesan Theological College, Governor of the Joint Theological College affiliated with McGill University, Governor of the St. Agathe Sanatorium for the cure of Tuberculosis; Rector's Warden of Christ Church Cathedral for two years; Justice of the Peace for the District of Montreal, also for the County of Terrebonne, in which county his country residence is situated.

He received his training in the Royal School of Artillery at the Citadel, Quebec for his commission in the Artillery.

He was the first president of the LONDON, Sept. 18.

 The wage dispute between the coal mine operators and the miners which only a few weeks ago threatened to culminate in a nation wide strike again has been referred to Downing Street for mediation. It is understood the miners allege that the owners are infringing on the agreement not to cut wages.
