

Ontario Legislature.

Provisions of Minister Ross' Plebiscite Bill.

The Voting to Take Place on Jan. 4, 1894.

How the Opinion of the Two Sexes Will be Secured—Bill to Divide the Duties of York's County Crown Attorney Carried.

(From Our Own Representative.) PARLIAMENT HOUSE, TORONTO, May 3.—

This afternoon the Minister of Education introduced his bill for the taking of a plebiscite on prohibition. He said the bill provided that the voting on the question should take place on Monday, Jan. 4, 1894, the day of the municipal elections all over Ontario. There was a desire on the part of the Government to have the fullest possible expression of opinion on the question, and the above-mentioned date had, therefore, been selected. It was not the intention to take a vote in the unorganized districts of the north, as the vote would in them have to be taken much later than in other portions of the Province. The desire of the Government was to obtain a simultaneous vote. The voters entitled to cast ballots would be divided into two classes, the men would vote at Legislative elections, and the women at municipal elections.

The issue would be limited exactly to women's power and inclination to do productive work. There could be no over-issue, nor need there be any under-issue. It would be a money that would have elasticity, and would exactly and automatically adapt its volume to requirements. It would represent value and be redeemable on demand in any commodity for sale in the country, and would itself be an actual representative of those commodities, which commodities might be gold, silver, lead, iron, wool, flour, beef, or any commodity at all will of the holder. Gold money cannot command more.

When our supply of gold gives out, as it did during the war, we have to fall back upon the national credit, and whether good or bad, that is all my nation has to fall back upon. The basis of all national credit is the power of the people to produce useful articles. Even gold itself—the gold of our financiers—actually rests upon a similar foundation. It is of as little value as lead, if it cannot command useful articles. And then let us make all "useful articles," and not gold alone, the basis of our money.

THE MONEY OF THE PEOPLE. The proposition is that the general government shall grant charters for national co-operative stores to any 50 or more actual producers. Every producer who contributes useful or needed products may be a member. No other class of members shall be admitted to membership, and no such establishments shall be conducted for individual profit.

These stores shall be authorized to issue national currency under the supervision and guarantee of the general government. It will be the duty of the general government to issue all useful and needed or saleable articles received, which are capable of manual delivery, including raw material and manufactured goods, in the discretion of the directors, subject to the approval of the government superintendence.

This currency would be redeemable in any articles or commodities as are received and for sale at the stores—not in any specific article or a given quantity, but in dollars' worth, exactly as gold now buys goods, the price varying according to circumstances. This currency would be redeemable at any national store at any place in the country. Instead of having the national currency redeemed in gold and then buying such things as we want, we would have the currency redeemable directly in such things as we want.

These national stores would require experienced business men to manage them, but less skill and judgment would be required than is now required to manage national banks or other business concerns, for there would be no interest to pay, no losses by bad debts and no dividends to earn on capital.

The price paid for goods would have to be sufficiently low to leave ample margin for expenses and contingencies. The surplus left at the end of the year would be divided amongst the members so they would then get the full value of their products. They would not have to accept the price which speculation or necessity compelled, but would get equitable prices as producers, and as consumers they would have to pay only the fair price.

Every day of wisely directed labor adds to the wealth of the country, and all that is needed is a proper voucher, which will entitle the holder to have delivered to him the product of that labor or the equivalent. Inasmuch as all wealth is produced by labor the workers—the actual producers—should have the sole power to issue representatives of that wealth. The power to issue currency should be taken from the national banks and all non-producers. Gold and silver should be demonetized, and this national store currency made legal tender.

Cost of the Celebration. NEW YORK, May 3.—Controller Myers says that the Columbian festivities cost the city less than $12,000 up to Saturday. The cost of the beautiful ball of Thursday night was $28,000, and it was believed that the receipts would nearly pay out the expenditure. The Columbian celebration of last October cost the city nearly $200,000, and the heaviest part of this is still unpaid.

IT IS ALMOST AS PALATABLE AS MILK. Prepared only by Scott &amp; Bown, Belleville.

It has been shown frequently that as a standard of value for deferred payments, a bushel of wheat is a surer measure of value than a given quantity of gold. The gold discovered in Australia and California produced tremendous fluctuations in the value of gold, and there is no certainty that a whole mountain of gold may not be discovered any day in Central Africa or elsewhere.

Such a thing did happen and gold became as plentiful as sand or clay, would the world be any better off if it were all coined into dollars? If plentiful it could be used in the arts in many ways now dreamed of; but in the form of dollars gold serves no purpose that a comparatively useless piece of paper would not serve as well.

The supply of gold is in no proportion to the quantity of other commodities. It bears no ratio to the population or to the products of the world. If next year should be a year of scarcity of other commodities there might be no change in the quantity of gold; if a year of plenty, there still might be no more or less of gold.

Thus if the world produces much or little the same total of gold must serve to purchase the total of the other commodities. So the producers, as a whole, get no more in the aggregate for a large product than for a small one. This is discouraging to the producers, but it will always be so so long as one or a few commodities are the basis of our money.

Our total of money should at all times represent the total available product of the country, but it need not, and should not, have intrinsic value.

Intrinsic value money is necessary amongst savages, where few can read and where few governments are strong enough to guarantee paper money.

Money is the mere implement of the arithmetic of industry, not the product. Dollars, whether of gold or paper, are but the counters for keeping tally of the game. Money simply serves as a medium of exchange, and should be only a representative of commodities more convenient to carry about than the articles themselves.

The ultimate object of all money is to obtain for the possessor, food, clothing, etc. Then why not make food, clothing, and all useful and needed commodities, the basis of our money, and not gold, silver, wampum, beaver-skins, or any one or two commodities?

Why should it be necessary that while one man is making a coat and another is making a pair of shoes, a third man must go to the mountains and dig out gold, in order that the tailor may exchange his coat with the shoemaker for a pair of shoes? It is evident that the labor of one man is wasted, when gold is used for such a purpose.

The following seems to be a simple, sound and feasible plan for issuing money: The issue would be limited exactly to women's power and inclination to do productive work. There could be no over-issue, nor need there be any under-issue.

It would be a money that would have elasticity, and would exactly and automatically adapt its volume to requirements. It would represent value and be redeemable on demand in any commodity for sale in the country, and would itself be an actual representative of those commodities, which commodities might be gold, silver, lead, iron, wool, flour, beef, or any commodity at all will of the holder. Gold money cannot command more.

When our supply of gold gives out, as it did during the war, we have to fall back upon the national credit, and whether good or bad, that is all my nation has to fall back upon. The basis of all national credit is the power of the people to produce useful articles. Even gold itself—the gold of our financiers—actually rests upon a similar foundation.
