One was from the principal of a young ladies' private school, where she would be required to teach some English branches, together with French and German, at a very moderate salary. The other informed her that a teacher in one of the publischools was ill and a substitute was desired to fill her place at ence.

stitute was desired to fill her place at since.

After consulting with madame regarding the matter, Shirley decided to take the place as a substitute, for she reasoned that if the regular teacher should not recover, or be obliged to resign from continued ill-health, she might be able to secure the position permanently.

The next morning she had an interview with the school committee, passed a most creditable examination, after which she was engaged on the spot, and notified that she would be expected to begin her duties on the following Monday.

This was on Thursday. On Friday morning, after a late breakfast, Shirley had just seated herself to read the paper to madame when there came a tap upon

She went to answer it, and found a bell-boy standing outside bearing a sliver salver, on which lay two cards.

"For Madame Marton," the boy said, briefly, and, taking them, Shirley passed them to her.

She was astonished to see the woman grow very pale as she read the names upon them, while her hand trembied with nervousness or some other emotion. Then, drawing herself up stiffly, she turned to the boy and commanded, briefly:

"Show them up."

"Show them up."

When he had disappeared, she remarked with equal brevity to her companion:
"William Norwood and his wife have pome to call on me; I want to see them

"I was very much asonished, on receiving your letter, to find that you were stopping at this hotel. I thought the best was none too good for you. What the best was none too good for you.

"It means," began madame, with some prvousness, "that a complication of cirmustances compelled me to come here stead of gains to the Hoffman, as usual. You will doubtless be still more surprised, William Norwood, when I tell that I am a poer woman—"

"But your episte—those valuable business blocks in Montreal and Quebec! What has become of them?" gasped her hephew.

"So I have always say supposed." said "So I have always supposed," said Madame Marton laconically, "But it is rather the rule than the exception for men to be false to their trust, as I proved years ago, and women are fools to put faith in them."

"But can't something be done—can't Nettleton be held responsible? Surely there must be some way by which you can recover at least a pertion of your property, or else make him suffer for it," said Mr. Norwood, who was greatly excited.

"Well, there isn't," Madame Marton returned with some sharpness. "I had no less than three lawyers out to see me last week, and went over the whole ground with them, and you know that I have a pretty good bead for business. have a pretty good head for business myself; but they all told me that Nettleton had managed things so shrewdly that no one could lay a finger en him, and it would be utterly impossible to recover a pound of what he had made away with."

"I can't believe ft—I won't believe it, Aunt Felice." Mr. Norwood angrily exclaimed, as he rese to his feet and began to pace the floor with nervous, uneven strides. "You shall not be so foully robbed; I will go myself to St. Sauveur and look into the matter and see if something cannot be saved from the wreck."

"Thank you." dryly responded his aunt, "but I tell you that it will be only a wild goose chase. You may rest assured that I left no stone unturned in the matter, for it is no easy thing to give up the home where one has lived all one's life and take up with a single room in a third-rate hotel."

Mr. Norwood felt the force of her words, for he well knew that her affection for her home had always been the strongest passion of her life, at least since her early disappointment; and if the fight which he believed she had made for it had been without avail, he certainly would not have much influence in the matter.

"No, there's just nothing to be done."

for it had been without avail, he certainly would not have much influence in the matter.

"No, there's just nothing to be done about it but to grin and bear it, as you used to say when you were a boy; so I have come to New York to stay with you." Madame Marten darted a quick, questioning glance into the faces of both of her visitors as she said this. "You know you have always told me to come to you whenever I wanted to, and I should have a home with you; so now I am going to take you at your word." "Ahem!—ah—yes—certainly, Aunt Felice." Mr. Norwood began, somewhat confusedly, while he glanced nervously at his wife, whose face, upon which anger and dismay were both plainly written, was a study that would have delighted an artist. "Of course you must come to us," he went on, flushing, "only the house is all upside down just now, as we have only recently returned, and you will be more comfortable here until we can get your room in order."

"How long will that take?" briefly inquired madame, with a slight hardening of the lines about her mouth.

"Well, Helen—how long do you think?" the man asked, turning to Mrs. Norwood, for, with that look on her face, he knew it would not be safe for him to set any time.

"I am sure I cannot tell." she coldly

"Yes, yes," he assented, getting more and more nervous. Then to cover his confusion he blurted out angrily: "Blast that Nettleton! I believe I will go to Quebec and investigate this matter, and confusion he blurted out angrily: "Blast that Nettleton! I believe I will go to Quebec and investigate this matter, and push him to the wall if he refuses to make some restitution."

"Well, you are welcome to investigate as much as you please, William," said madame, with ready compliance: "but of course you know it costs money to go to law, and I don't feel like putting out what little money I have in my possession on uncertainties. I have made up my mind that these three lawyers knew what they were tlking about; so far as I am concerned, I reckon things will have to stand as they are."

"But your furniture, your pictures, silver, bric-a-brac—what have you done with them?" inquired Mrs. Norwood, a greedy light burning in her eyes, for she had long coveted some of those costly ornaments and solid plate.

"Oh, of course, most of things belong to me yet, but I had to leave them in the house until I could get settled somewhere. If I make my home with you, Helen, you can have some of them, and welcome," madame replied in a gracious tone.

Sleeplessness marks the very climax of human suffering. It is only a step removed from insanity. When sleep no longer restores the exhausted nature, the struggle with disease cannot last long. The starting point of the nervous dis-orders which produce ill-health and sleeplessness, is generally a diseased condition of the womanly organs. Restore these organs to sound health and the appetite comes back, the day's work no longer wearies, and sleep is sound and refreshing. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures diseases of the womanly organs. It stops the drains which weaken women; it heals the inflammation and ulceration, and cures female weakness. There is no alcohol in "Favorite Prescription" and it is entirely free from opium, cocaine and all other narcotics. It is a temperance medicine.

"My health has been poor for many years and I had taken a great deal of medicine, but it did me no good," writes Mrs. Rose Kennedy, of Springbluff, Adams Co., Wis. "Last August my health was very poor; I had no appetite and could not sleep. I wrote to Dr. Pierce and he kindly advised me to take his 'Favorite Prescription.' I took five bottles of the 'Prescription' and one bottle of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and I feel like a new woman."

Cure sick headache by using Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

"It is the most incomprehensible thing in the world," her husband remarked, with a gloomy brow. "You have trusted too much to that Nettleton—you'd better have let me managed your affairs, as I wanted to a few years ago; you made a great mistake then, Aunt Felice, for once in your life,' he concluded, sententiously.

"Perhaps," the woman replied, with a shrewd twinkle in her eyes. "Well, people all have their ups and downs in life, and I guess I'm about right in thinking that it isn't wise to pin your faith to any man, or woman either, for that matter; there is precious little that is genuine in human nature nowadays," she concluded, queting her favorite maxim. quoting her favorite maxim.

Mrs. Nerwood flushed at this speech,

"Reality, William, I think we must go," she said, folding her such mantle about her ample form. "I promised Blanche that I would go out to do some shepping with her. By the way, she interposed, as the thought of her daughter had recalled something to her mind, "what has become of your companion?" "She has gone out to do some errands," answered madame, sweeping the woman's face with a searching giance.

"Of course you cannot keep her, now "Of course you cannot keep her, now that you have lost your property," Mrs.

Norwood observed.
"Oh, no; I shail not need her, if I am to come to you," was the matter-of-fact fier visitor winced, but she asked, with vident curiosity:

"What will become of her?" "She is going to teach," was the brief rejoinder; then madame turned inquisi-tor. "How is Blanche?" she asked. "Happy, I suppose, with that smart hus-band she has caught?" swered, but she did not look comfortable over this reference to her daughter.
"Is she going to set up a house of her own?"

"Oh, no; we could not spare Blanche,"
"Oh, no; we could not spare Blanche," "Oh, no; we could not spare hanche, Mrs. Norwood responded, rather hastily. "She and her husband will make their home with us—at least, for the present. I am afraid it is going to crowd us a little," she interposed, with a reflective air, "for we have had to give up a couple of rooms to them; but we shall have to manage some way."

of rooms to them; but we shall have to manage some way."
"Humph!" grunted madame, with quick perception; then, sharply: "When may I expect to hear from you?"
"Well, I cannot tell exactly—just as soon as we can get ready for you I will drop you a line. Come, William."
And with frigid and hurried adieus the husband and wife took their departure, leaving Madame Marton to chew her cud of human ingratitude alone.
Her face was dark and stern when the door closed after her visitors, her lips Her face was dark and stern when the door closed after her visitors, her lips twitched nervously, and her eyes blazed with repressed anger.

"Well, the thermometer must have gone down a good many degrees during their call," she muttered, with a bitter smile; "it was up to summer heat when they came in, but down to zero when they left; they didn't even shake hands with me. I imagine that Blanche's letter to that Lovering girl was a rather truthful indication of the pulse of the whole family. However, I will not be in too much of a hurry to judge them. I will wait a little, though I am reasonably sure that I shall be a 'queerer bird' than ever, now that I am shorn of my golden plumage."

Nervous Headache A very distressing and common malady, doubtless it has its origin in some unbalanced condition of the nervous system. One of the simplest, safest and most efficient remedies is Nerviline. Twenty drops in a little sweetened water gives almost immediate relief, and this treatment should be supplemented by bathing the region of pain with Nerviline. To say it acts quickly fails to express the result. Druggists sell it everywhere.

There was never a time at any stage of the game when McGovern did not have the ambitious aspirant for championship honors at his mercy, and the population than is the fishery defrom a disinterested standpoint it looked very much as if he allowed Herrera to stay four rounds and then put him out early in the fifth. While McGovern rained early in the fifth. While McGovern rained blows on his man all the time, it was not until the beginning of the fifth that he put his strength behind them. The end came quickly after that, as, at the first lead of the right and left on the jaw, Herrera went down for the count. He came up gamely, only to go down again. The last time he was unable to get on his feet at the end of the count, and was declared out. The men met before the National Athletic Club for a 20-round contest. Both men weighed in at 6 o'clock and were pronounced to be in good condition. The big hall was crowded, every seat being taken. Betting was quite lively at all sorts of prices. On the general result it ranged from 3½ to 1 to 4 to 1 on McGovern. Many good bets were made that Herrera would stay its rounds. bets were made that Herrera would stay six rounds.

The preliminary battle between Danny Dougherty and Kid McFadden was a rattling contest. The men were at it from the start to the finish, and the decision went to Dougherty on his cleverness. McFadden did most of the leading, but was met at every step with stiff left jabs on the face and hard right on the body. McFadden fought fiercely in the last round, and sent Dougherty to his knees with a right as the gong ended the fight. The crowd was one of the the fight. SEAGRAM AGAIN. Toronto, May 30.—The feature of yesterday's racing was the victory of Mr. Seagram's Procession in the Liverpool cup. The cup is the gift of Thomas Oakshott, of Liverpool, England, and one of the conditions of the gift was that if won two years in succession by a Canadianowned horse, to which the race is confined, it should become the winner's property. Mr. Seagram has not only won it two years in succession, but twice with property. Mr. Seagram has not only won it two years in succession, but twice with the same horse, and he was naturally proud of Procession's victory, which was gained after an exciting struggle on the stretch with Orontas, the first horse behind, a little over a half length at the finish. The track yesterday was in good condition, and the attendance fair, despite gloomy weather. Among the foreign visitors was President Riley of the Queen's County (N.Y.) ## HATCHING WHITEFISH BY MILLIONS.

A Visit to the Government Hatchery at Sandwich.

Extracting the Spawn and Hatching the Fry-Improved Methods of Transportation.

Among the many departments which comprise the machinery of government and the administration of public affairs in the Dominion of Canada, none is more important to a large section of partment. Those interested may be divided into two classes-the not inconsiderable portion who make their living wholly or in part by the plying of the calling of the fisherman, and the larger class, who fish merely for the enjoyment the sport affords them, or to supply their own table with the flesh of the scaly denizens of the deep. To these two classes an account of a visit to the whitefish hatchery at Sandwich, one of fourteen hatcheries maintained in Canada by the Dominion Government, will perhaps prove of interest, as showing the manner in which the government provides for the re-stocking with fish of the various waters of the Dominion, as they become depleted through the operation of various causes.

THE WHITEFISH. To begin with, a description of the fish whose hatching forms the subject of this article may not be out of place. The whitefish (coregonus albus, Lesueur), is a valuable member of the salmon family, peculiar to North America. It is found in the great lakes from Lake Ontario to the Arctic Sea. in Lake Champlain, in the smaller lakes of Canada connected with the St. Lawrence on the south side, and in the Mackenzie, Coppermine and other rivers flowing into the icy sea. mouth is small, and without teeth, the body elongated, but thick, head small and pointed, tail forked, first not so long as high in front, and scales large. It attains a length of 11/2 to 21/2 feet, and a weight of 3 to 10 pounds, in the clear waters of Lake Superior becoming very large and fat. It is bluish gray on the back, lighter on the sides, and white below. In October the fish enter the rivers from the lakes to spawn, usually returning in three or four weeks. They are gregarious, and move from place to place according to the sects and larvae, tender aquatic plants, soft-shelled mollusks, and occasionally small fish. Whitefish die very quickly

THE HATCHERY. The government hatchery at Sandwich is easily reached by a pleasant trip from Windsor in the electric cars. A short walk down a pretty country road brings the visitor to the hatchery. which is pleasantly situated, overlooking the Detroit River, with its constantly shifting panorama of passing vessels. Entering the building, a long room is found, containing a large oblong open tank in the center, while down each side run rows of watertaps, with large glass jars standing in troughs underneath. At one end of the room are the large engines which pump from the river the constant supply of fresh water needed in the hatching of the fish.

HOW SPAWN IS OBTAINED. The spawn from which the young ish are hatched is obtained in October and November each year. The parent whitefish are caught by seine in large numbers in the vicinity of Boisblane Island and Fighting Island, in the Detroit River. They are placed in receptacles provided for the purpose, and are carefully watched. When the period of gestation is fully advanced, the spawn is taken from them, and the fish are then released. The spawn, which consists of countless small globules of gelatinous matter, resembling nothing so much as boiled sago or tapioca, is taken to the hatchery and placed in the tall glass jars, which are the "incubators" for the baby fish. A rubber tube depends from the water tap above each reaches the bottom of the glass receptacle. Through each tube a constant stream of water flows, keeping the spawn constantly agitated. The water escapes from the jar by a curved lip on one side of the top, while a closely-woven wire screen placed before this lip prevents the particles of spawn from being carried off with the overflow water. The water is not artificialy heated in any way, but is drawn directly from the river, and is consequently the same in temperature. This year, for instance, the hatching of the fish was later than usual, owing to the increased coldness of the water, due to the continued presence of the ice in the St. Clair River.

PROCESS OF HATCHING. All through the winter the process of hatching goes on, till in April the tiny fish begin to make their appearance They are then allowed to escape from the jars into the trough in which the

CANCER GERMS COMPLETELY DESTROYED.

The New Treatment Kills the Cancer and Cures the Disease.

For every disease germ, there ought to be a specific antidote. That is the principle on which scientists are working at the present day. For the germ malaria, the antidote is quinine. For the germ of diphtheria there is the anti-diphtheritic serum. For the germs that cause smallpox, typhoid fever, scarlet fever and the like, there has not yet been found a specific antidote.

For the germ causing cancer, an efficient antidotal treatment has been in vogue for some time and numbers of people who have availed themselves of it have been cured without the necessity of a painful and dangerous operation.
