Al-though he assured the house that the speech con-tained sufficient matter for thought to furnish a "Thank you Davidge," (sarcastically), "I am yery long speech, he deliberately proceeded to drag in Dominion politics and made a number of rambling remarks on the national policy. He denied that the prosperity of the country was in any way due to or had been promoted by that policy, and ascribed it altogether to the increase in the exports of the forests and the term of the day, Davidge read with impressive effect from the forests and the term of the country was in any way due to or had been promoted by that policy, and ascribed it altogether to the increase in the exports of the forests and the farm. He quoted figures to show this, but omitted to mention the increased export this, but omitted to mention the increased export of manufactured goods. In response to ironical hear hears he warned the opposition that they would not feel like laughing by the time he was done. In his opinion the late depression was due to over production. Instead of the times being better for the working classess they were worse, for the purchasing power of the dollar had decreased. For the benefit presumably of the opposition who are not readers of that journal be epitomised the Globe's figures on prices of farm produce, but neglected to give the paper credit for them. Act of 1878. Example, whether good or bad, is always conta-

The rule of promotion both in the "ordinary' and "special" divisions is by seniority, though it may be set aside under special circumstances. Promotion from one class to another is in all cases optional with the head of a department. The act also provides for the appointment of examiners whose duty it shall be to investigate into and report upon the fitness of candidates for office, though nothing in the way of "competitive examinations" is contemplated.

Though the act was passed in 1878, it has so far remained a dead letter, owing to the optional character of its provisions, the wording of the clauses relating to the annual increase being "may" in tead of "shall." The classification required by the act has been regularly made every year, but this of
