As rapidly as possible the gas jets were lighted and everybody looked surprised, none more so than the members of the firm. The engine was running as rapidly as usual, and the dynamos were working clegantly when an investigation was made, still no electric light was visible above. Under the dynamo there stood a rat, with one leg raised up as if about to take another step. The rat was if about to take another step. The rat wa dead and rooted to the spot. He had leape on one of the copper conductors under the on one of the copper conductors under the brush, and in stepping on the other close I the current so that it passed through his body, killing him instantly, the rat remaining nailed to the spot, while the entire current from a forty-light Brush machine passed through him and prevented it from a scending above. The machinery was ascending above. The machinery was stopped, the rat taken off, and then every-thing was all right again, for when the machinery was again started the lights burned as well as usual.
