

Holding Papers Together

(May Myrtle French, in 'New England Homestead,')

This little article is intended to use in temporarily fastening together half a dozen copies, more or less, of your favorite paper. It is made from a strong, straight, wire hair-pin, about 2½ inches long.

First bend up the ends, as shown, in such a manner that the loop made by the bend lies flat with the original shape of the pin. Then take a large nail or slate pencil, and lay it across the pin at the place shown by dotted line, and bend the top down until it comes between the 'legs' of the pin. Bend it until it goes a trifle beyond the level of the lower part of pin. This is in order to give it the necessary spring to hold the paper firmly.

Put together the papers to be fastened, slip two of these little articles over the backs, a short distance from each end, and your papers are snugly convenient.
