

professional anthropologists might indeed be necessary, exchanges of scientific data valuable or exchanges of bibliographical material advantageous but where the economy and social conditions are sub-standard, some of these must wait while priority goes where urgency is greatest. We would request the Director-General to keep this firmly in mind when he prepares, as desired by the Economic and Social Council, the principles to serve as guiding lines for bilateral, regional and international action regarding relations and exchanges in the fields of education, science and culture."