whence it will again circulate through the members, and will multiply itself with unceasing activity.

not

ged,

has

to its

s seticher

, and

eping

most luable

long, es the

lother

saries,

d will

nufacit be,

o, any vealth,

State,

to offer

uits of

e con-, from In attributing to Colonies these beneficial results, it will be understood that we forbear to calculate on several accidents, which have at different times brought ruin upon infant Settlements. An unhealthy climate, against which few precautions have been taken; dissentions amongst the Colonists themselves; the neighbourhood of flerce and numerous tribes of savages; neglect on the part of the Government at home; and other such causes, being no more than incidental evils, and such as may mostly be prevented by wisdom and experience, ought not in fairness to be put in the balance against the benefits of Colonization, which arise from it naturally, and almost necessarily.

Still less will the general question be affected by errors which may have been committed in the detail of commercial regulations between a Colony and its Parent State. In these points the nations of modern Europe are accused of having followed a most illiberal line of policy; of having treated their Colonies more as slaves, than as children.