

EIGHTHLY,—Beware of wandering from one place to another and cherishing a roving disposition and a habit of change. Not a few on their arrival, stay a year or two at Quebec or at Montreal, or at each of them, and then rove to some other place for a season or two, and possibly ramble to the United States until they have just as much left as will pay their expenses back to Canada, or not even that, whither they return with the resolution of the good Shunamite of old.—“I dwell among mine own people :” but although this is an undoubted truth, yet many will read it who will determine to make the trial for themselves before they will be satisfied. But I would remind them that experience keeps a dear school—that a rolling stone gathers no moss, and that repentance comes too late when all is spent. In either of the places of which they have made trial, they might have done well by steady perseverance; but they never studied the saying of that great Economist Doctor Franklin, that “three removes are as bad as a fire.”

Many others, there are, who have spent the greater part of their days as mechanics or tradesmen, and who were scarcely able to tell the difference between wheat and oats, had they seen them growing in the field, who have imagined themselves, not only fit to become farmers, but to brave all the hardships and difficulties of the woods, and have made the experiment, until worn out by fatigue, discouragement and disgust, they have at length with patience and money completely exhausted, made an eternal farewell to the wilderness, and returned with a higher relish than
