Hon, Mr. Hanna's Confession During a Spicy Discussion of the License Situation.

There was a lively discussion in the legislature yesterday on Mr. Hanna's liquor license bill and the dismissal of Inspector Hastings and his two col-| leagues was again attacked and defended. When the bill was taken up in committee Mr. Graham drew attention to the fact that the commercial travelers' associations were urging that something be done to assure them accomodation in towns where local option ruled and where hotels might have to go cut of business. He suggested that temperance hotels be made to pay a nominal fee, and that they be obliged to furnish meals and accommodation on request as licensed hotels are. Mr. Hanna replied that the act had no concern with places other. cern with places other than those where liquor was sold.

Hon. Mr. Ross suggested that municipalities be given the power to run temperance hotels.

Mr. Mackay thought that in towns of 5000 or over such hotels might be licensed, and Mr. Preston proposed bonusing by municipalities. Col. Atkinson believed that liquor license commission. ers might be given power to arrange for such further licensing.

such further licensing.

New Regulations Deferred.

Hon. Mr. Hama said the old regulations would be continued till new ones were framed. It was not the intention to bring the new regulations down till the bill passed.

Mr. Ross: They will be open to the view of the house later?

Mr. Hanna: Not this session.

Mr. Preston (Brant) did not think good service could be got from inspectors until the government took their appointment out of the hands of the patronage committee.

Mr. Graham objected to license inspectors haying any other occupation. There had never been a time when the enforcement of the liquor law was so partisan as now. Inspector Hastings had been dismissed for refusing a license to a man who had been eight times convicted, and the government held up the licensee.

Mr. Hanna Explains.

Mr. Hanna said the government had made one mistake in not dismissing the license inspectors when the government entered office. There had been a constant repetition of charges against these men. Many were unfounded, but in trying to enforce the law there was the obstacle that the inspectors had for years been forcing hotel-keepers to support the party in power. If the law was to be properly enforced it would have to be thru the friends of the government. Mr. Hanna emphatically injed the charge of Mr. Graham as to the dismissal of Hastings. It was the first he had heard of it.

Mr. Sutheriand charged that under the late regime Conservatives was as a dividing the responsibility. It would be dangerous to a government that did not desire to do government that did not desire to do it how there would be difficulty in having additional means of enforcing law.

Mr. Ross: There would be divided responsibility.
