"Let's have Blind-man's buff," suggested one boy who loved no other game so well. "All right," cried a chorus of happy voices. "Blind-man's buff! It's great sport! Who'll be the blind man?"

"Sammy Travers," cried other voices, naming the boy who had proposed the game. "All right, bring on your blind." laughed Sammy, taking the centre of the floor.

NAUGHTY LITTLE ROSIE

Laura and her mama greeted Rosie gra-iously, the former taking her little uest's hat and jacket (for it was a chilly guest's hat and jacket (for it was a chilly October day) and running into another room put them on the hat and wrap rack. When returning to the parlor Rosie cried out to her.: "Where did you put my hat and jacket? I want them here beside me. Some one might carry them off."

Now wasn't that a very naughty thing to say? She really did not know how rude she was. Poor Mrs. Davis hurried to the hall rack and fetched Rosio's hat end she was. Poor Mrs. Davis hurried to the hall rack and fetched Rosie's hat and jacket, placing them on the piano where their owner might "keep an eye on them" as one of the jolly, mischievous boys put it in a whisper to a comrade. (The fact is, Rosie was known by reputation, and had pon it, not waiting for an invitation.

Rose was known by reputation, and had very few playmates in consequence).

After all the guests had assembled Mrs. Davis led them to the big sitting room where they were given full sway to play games. All the furniture had been removed so that there might be nothing to interfere with such games as Blind-man's buff and London bridge.

"Well, what shall we play?" asked Laura, looking about in the faces of her young guests.

But just at that moment—and as Mrs. Davis was tying a folded handkerchief about Sammy's eyes—Rosie, pouting, said in a very unpleasant voice "I don't like Blind-man's buff. If you play that I won't play, so I won't. I'll get my things and Several young faces turned inquiringly towards Mrs. Davis, but not a boy or girl present said a word. They were all too well-bred to reply to so rude a child. Mrs. Davis went to Rosie, saying: "Well, Rosie, suppose you all play Blind-man's buff for a little while. Then you may going to a party; but I've got a long way choose the game to be played next. Don't you think that a nice plan?"

For a moment Rosie stood as if uncertain what to do. Then, enraged at not being allowed to have her own way, regardless of the plans of Mrs. Davis and the wishes of others, she burst out crying angrily. In vain Mrs. Davis tried to pacify the naughty child, her cries rose higher and higher. There was no such thing as playing games — or having the pleasure they had anticipated — by the fifteen other little guests. A number of them whispjered their disapproval of the naughty Rosie's conduct, and all looked their condemnation of her.

"Well, if you will not play, nor will cease your crying," said Mrs. Davis a bit sternly, "I shall have to put your hat and jacket on you and take you home to your mama and grandmama. You see, my dear child, there are others here who must be considered, and you are spoiling their pleasure."

"But I don't want to go home," wailed Rosie. "I want to stay to the party."
