

Poetry.

STANZAS.

First breath the cloudless sky,
And stars were shining bright;
The shadowy river rolling by,
Was gazed upon with rapt delight.

The shadowy river rolled away,
But still the stars were there;
From midnight to the break of day
I watched their golden glare.

I listened while the southern breeze
Aloft the waters played,
And kissed the stream and through the trees
A gentle music made.

And morning came and showed to me
The river rolling on,
In eddying current lazily,
But still the stars were gone.

I saw the flowers, I saw the trees,
And grassy glades around,
And heard the gentle southern breeze
Among the branches sound.

Although the same, it seemed not so,
I better loved the night,
The dim, obscure, mysterious glow,
And flickering starry light.

I thought of Fate, that rules us here
With adamantine wand;
Of human life, so cold and clear,
Tied in an iron band.

Inexorable, changeless lot,
By all the brave defied,
Was not the lot of the stubborn knot,
Divided, not united.

The stream flows on for all we live
Material shores betwixt,
The little comfort it can give
With many a sorrow mixed.

But latent shadows lurk behind,
Dismissing us in haste,
A brighter glory undefined,
This way the kindly part.

This mystic wraith I now know,
Of better things conceived,
Remains a desire prize below,
When my good deed revealed.

WOMAN, THE CONQUEROR.—It is saying something for the heart of man, when it is proved, that a woman can command him as a puppet especially made to obey her. For the man is not to be deceived who can be deceived by the wily woman, a fair prettiness. He who has determined not to be a puppet, need not be deceived, need not be deceived by his weakness, if he is at length compelled to yield to the will of her will.

The heart, yielding thus to a woman, feels a happy expansion—a weakness that is as delightful as it is relieving. The heart yields to the iceberg of the woman's soul, and lifts the money-grub from the thoughts of gay gentleness; it thrusts out selfishness from the rich man's breast, and wins acknowledgment from all.

Love's FORGETFULNESS.—It is said that poor men always make love better than those who are rich, because, having less to care about, and not being pulled up by their own consequences, they are not so selfish, and think more of the lady than themselves. Young ladies, also, who fall in love, love the entire man, and not feeling inclined to eat at that time, they imagine that love will sweep away the dirt of the world. They discover their mistake after the honeymoon, when their appetites return.

Two persons who have chafed each other out of all their own species, and a desire to be better than each other, bound themselves to be good-humored, affable, discreet, forgiving, patient, and will respect with respect to each other's frailties and imperfections, to the end of their lives.
