Last January I was attacked with a severe cold, which, by neglect and frequent exposures, became worse. My cough followed, accompanied by pain in the chest, from which I suffered intensely.

My Wife and I. By MARY CLEMMER. We're drifting out to the isles of peace; We let the weary world go by; We sail away o'er summer seas, My wife and I.

How poor is to the proudest prize For which earth's weary millions sigh; Our need we see in two dear eyes, My wife and I.

The travelling nations rise and fall, They lift the palm, they bear the rue; Y. Y. bliss is this, to know through all, That one is true.

But never shall he faint or fall Who lives to hear o'er every vale The sweeter than the higher call Of his true mate.

We're drifting out to realms of peace; We let the weary world go by; We sail away o'er summer seas, My wife and I.

The fading glories grow far and dim, The stars are lighting in the sky; We sail away to ocean's hymn, My wife and I.

You're not going out this cold night? 'Yes, I'm well protected, and it is scarcely any colder than when we came from riding this afternoon.

Not I. I'd rather stay at home and enjoy a good nap and feast before the fire; though Mr. Barker looks at me, whenever he meets me, as if I am guilty of unpardonable sin.

You know it is the regular meeting night, and the cold isn't intense enough to keep many away. We have made this meeting an object of special prayer.

Well, you're a dear good sister, and I shall always be the indolent one; you will dispose of all seeming indifference, Grace settled herself on the sofa, and drawing her gay alghab about her, prepared for one of her home evenings.

Two years before, these sisters, with thirty of their young friends, had stood in the village church and consecrated themselves to Christ's service.

Then she was alone again, the fire was burning brightly on the hearth, and Carrie's cheery voice was asking: 'Have you had a pleasant evening, Grace?'

A Blessing on a Curse. - Two Scotchmen emigrated in the early days to California. Each thought to take with them some memorial of their beloved country.

After the exchange of greetings, so usual at the close of a journey of this kind, he began arranging the things he had with him as if preparing for a journey. She could learn nothing from their conversation, yet she determined to follow.

Bixby was Calm. One of the Bixby children was seized with a fit of croup the other night. Bixby heard the little fellow's labored breathing, and bounding over the footboard of the bed, yelped: 'Croup!'

Then he tried to put his trousers on over his head, but finally got them on wrong side out, and tore into his shirt with it wrong side in front.
