Hygiene of the Rural School.

The word "Education" has broadened in its meaning during the past two generations so far as the public mind is concerned, and now includes much more than a training in and knowledge of the three "R's." We now have an emphasis placed upon the care of the body as well as training of the memory. We no longer hold to the old fallacy that the body is a thing of evil that needs to be harshly disciplined in order to train the mind and purify the soul. On the contrary, we recognize an essential unity, a correlation of mind, soul and body; or in other words, that the training of the mental, moral and physical powers must go hand in hand in order to secure the greatest measure of human welfare. No one any longer doubts the truth of Juvenal's fine old phrase: mens sana in corpore sano.

We are realizing to-day that the sanitary condition of our schools is a very vital matter. We know that there is an intimate relation between the child's physical condition and his school efficiency. Failure in studies, general apathy and dullness, nervousness and even viciousness, are often traceable to minor bodily defects that are largely remedial. It is a well known fact that the children often suffer from minor defects, but how serious these may be can only be determined by a qualified nurse or physician. Recently an examination of some 135,000 pupils in the New York schools showed that about 69 per cent. were physically defective. Of course, in this instance slum conditions figure largely, but even allowing for this it must be confessed that such a state of affairs is not very bright for the nation of the future. What are the conditions in Canada?

Whilst the newer schools, especially those of the cities and the recent consolidated schools, are well equipped to meet the needs of physical training and sanitary environment, it must be said that in many rural schools, village schools and even town schools throughout our land, very undesirable conditions exist. We cannot blame the higher authorities for it all. The Department of Education provides plans, specifications, inspections and grants, but the requirements are sometimes evaded or carelessly carried out or only the minimum is provided, and the recommendations of the inspectors are not taken seriously enough. Trustees often postpone much needed changes, do little more than the minimum requirements and keep just within the inspector's report.

Progress in school sanitation is no faster than that of society in general and the average school is much behind the average home in comfort and convenience. Even in towns, where one would naturally expect that these matters would be attended to, the heating, lighting and sanitation generally are often such as no businessman would tolerate in his office or in his own home. The perfect school building has not yet come, and many boards to-day have on their hands old school plants which they have inherited. Whilst a business firm would not hesitate to pull down a building which they considered not adequate to their needs, a school board doing a similar thing with an old school-house would likely get into all kinds of trouble. The public need educating along this line. But when a new building is to be erected, no intelligent official dare ignore the truth and light of sanitary science.

It should be needless to argue for better health conditions in our schools. Good health and long life are desired by all, and every father and mother wishes to see the children grow up strong and healthy, as well as receive that mental training so necessary to young people going out into life for themselves. A perfect physical condition is just as desirable for the boy or girl on the farm as for those in the towns. What is needed, however, is to point out where we have been lax, to do this emphatically enough that the public will demand improvement, and then see that proper sanitary arrangements are secured and, what is very important, to have them properly and regularly maintained. The physical welfare of the individual has a
