The Playactress.
BY S. B. CHOCKETT.
CHAPTER V.—Continued.
'How do you know?' said Gilbert Rutherford, smiling very content.
'It was down in Surrey, you see,' said the little maid, 'where Aunt Bessie took me once when mother was not well. I have two mothers, you know, she went on, in a matter-of-fact tone. 'One of them is nice, and I like her, but the other one I am frightened for when she comes to the door. Then I hide. See; once she did that.'
'She turned up her little hand and showed the livid scar of a healed wound on her wrist.
'It was borne in upon him that there was a tragedy behind the black dress and the white check of the playactress. And it came to him that he ought to investigate it.
'O, but the bumble bee!' cried Alle. 'It was down on the hill above Willey, where there is the nicest church, all old and grown over, so sweet. Aunt Bessie and I were in a lane, the biggest bumble-bigger nor ever you saw, you know the kind, band of brown across his tail—'
'The Great Preacher smiled and nodded. He knew the kind. His boyish days came back to him, and he remembered how warm it was when such bumble bees sat down.
'And he hummed, 'went on Alle. 'Yes, indeed, not fast, but busy, and don't care like, same as when you wake in the morning and hope it's not rising time. Then he got, this bumble, into a big white 'volvoius hanging on the hedge. He straddled his legs and nearly tumbled out. He was such a jolly fat old bumble. And the 'volvoius was so jumpy up and down, that at last he got tipped out and fell on his back. Then he got very cross when he had done this three times, and so would you, grandfather, if your pupil that you preach in did that to you—I know you would. So he buzzed cross—you know, not sleepy and lazy any more, but sharper. So when Aunt Bessie—she was walkin' slow and thinkin'—'not minding, I grabbed him quick, just only a moment—and then I go. So would you, grandfather. So would most anybody. And Aunt Bessie she came and put the end of her key over the place where he sat down and pulled out the stinger and kissed it good. But I don't think that kissing is as much use as it is used to be, do you know, grandfather. Perhaps I'm getting too big now.'
'Soon after they drove into the courtyard of the Nether Long, and the dogs came bounding out clamorously. William Greig called his sons to quiet them, but as soon as he father had lifted the little wail down, she went straight up to them, and Tweed and Trusty became her friends within two minutes.

'The Greig lassie, haxton and blessing, at first a little shy, stood at the door to welcome the minister and his little maid.
'Now they were all of them within, and Alle climbing on Jeanie's knee. Within twenty minutes they were the greatest friends in the world, calling each other by their first names, and looking into the 'room' occasionally in order to see that William Greig and the minister were still at their posts.
'The churchman, the little heart that, after having been round the farmyard to see, for the first time, that ever-fascinating array of hens, geese, turkeys, and other delightful creatures, Alle sought her way back to her grandfather's side and stood patiently with her hand on his knee while he talked with William Greig.
'There was a little room off the minister's, which had a door also from the passage. It was Jeanie's room, and little Alle was to sleep there. So she went up and brought out of her pocket an old purse, a little crushed picture of a young girl left in a cheap round gilt frame, and a penny with a hole in it.
'These she put as her household gods on the mantelpiece. Then she worshipped them for a little while, and so came down.
'The firm of Nether Dullang lay on the crest of the moors. These were great crofts about it, and the corn waved over them. It was a pleasant place up near to the sky with the wind blowing over it, and the Loch of Ken lying flashing beneath in a valley through which the air always blew fresh and sweet.
'Already the pale cheek of the little city girl seemed rosy. The minister and she went out to walk among the pleasant fields, and away over to the edge of the heather. They went hand-in-hand like two young things, for all the difference of years. The grasshoppers thrilled and leapt among the grasses. Alle obtained an assurance from her grandfather that it was not warm where any of these sat down, and soon had half a dozen by her, which, however, escaped again when she was so caught them.
'This is better than Richmond Park,' said the little girl, eagerly.
'Resting on a tussock of heather with the purple moors all about, and the great vacancy of the skies above, Gilbert Rutherford cautiously drew the little girl to speak of her London home, and the love she bore to Bessie Upton.
'As he did so, they played at 'hard heads', at which the minister rather fancied his skill in the choice of slightly combative specimens of that highly respectable. But the little maid regularly beat him, for it soon appeared that he had been under the instruction of a veteran.
'When he acknowledged defeat, she made light of it, saying only—
'You should play with Aunt Bessie. She is a one-er, if you like. You would not have a chance with her, I should like to see you. Oh, I wish you were a warrior.'
'Now Gilbert Rutherford had no very strict scruples himself. This little maid was a solvent of suspicion and evil suggestion; but he thought to himself quietly what his session would have said had they seen him playing at 'hard heads' on the side of a wild moor with a playactress from London. He did not mind it then, for it was not a bad thing to dwell upon, even in jest.
'They continued to play, and Alle continued the praises of Aunt Bessie, till to Gilbert Rutherford something rose clear in his mind—a purpose that came suddenly and remained. He was accustomed to having his future home in upon him as though from without. He himself would have said that he was being 'led by a higher hand,' and he shall not contradict him. But if so, Providence was broader-minded than a session of the Hill Kirk.
'That's six of yours this one has out the h ad off,' cried the blood-thirsty Amazon. 'We shall call him 'Greatheart.'
'Who told you about Greatheart?' said the minister, with some little disappointment, for he had had it in the mind for the very next day to introduce this bright maiden to the wonders of the Tinker's Pilgrim.
'Before he heard it, he knew what the answer would be.
'Did no one ever do anything but Aunt Bessie?' he said, with just a suggestion of peevishness in his tone.
'Aye, a Cherry Pectoral. Then take it or not, as he says.'
'We get such our pleasure from your books, and we shall not contradict him. But if so, Providence was broader-minded than a session of the Hill Kirk.
'That's six of yours this one has out the h ad off,' cried the blood-thirsty Amazon. 'We shall call him 'Greatheart.'

Misery of Protruding Piles
Read the evidence that this distressing ailment is cured by Dr. CHASE'S OINTMENT.
Some people find it hard to believe that anything short of a surgical operation will cure protruding piles. The doctors have brought about this belief. There is any amount of proof that Dr. Chase's Ointment is a positive cure for this as well as all other forms of piles. Capt. William Smith, Revelstoke, B. C., writes:
'It is with such pleasure I state that I have used Dr. Chase's Ointment for itching, protruding piles of many years' standing, and it has completely cured me. I had previously tried many other remedies, but they did me no good. I would strongly recommend this ointment to those suffering from piles, and I am sure it is a good and genuine cure.'
In scores of ways Dr. Chase's Ointment is useful in every form in the treatment of itching skin disease. It is probably the only treatment that can be positively relied upon to relieve and cure itching, bleeding and protruding piles. 60 cts. a box, at all dealers, or Silasnoe, Baker & Co., Toronto.
