tarism brought to a high pitch of effi ciency just as is the case to-day. The armed uprising of barons and people against a feudal king and his force in 1215 was a fight for free institu tion in England, just as the fight in Europe to-day is a fight for free in stitution against the supremacy of a military caste. Curiously enough there is a parallel between the Free Church movement and the struggle for Magna Charta, in which a great ecclesiastic, Stephen Langton, was a leading figure. One of the first provisions, the first if our memory serves us right, was that the church Pleasant Bay, C. B. should be free from interference by the feudal king. Stephen Langton, Cardinal and Archbishop of Canterbury, was the leader of this move ment, just as the great churchman, John Wesley, was the great leader of the Methodist movement.
