Edith ran to the brook for water, and brought it in a china cup that had rolled out of the basket. She bathed the sick woman's face and chafed her icy cold hands. The faded, refined old face and long gray curls seemed in some way familiar, and suddenly it flashed upon her memory that she had seen it that very morning in the cottage garden among the Irish tenements. She was the same tall, thin old dame with long curls she had seen out in the garden watering the flowers. "I am so glad you have come," whispered the pale lips. "I thought I should die here alone." "Were you ill when you came?" Edith asked. "What caused it?" The sick woman's hand pointed vaguely to some suspicious looking fungi un-der the pine tree. "I heard they were good to eat, the pink gills, you know, and so I thought I would try.

Good heavens! you have been eating Before the poor old creature could reply her face turned a pale and sickly blue, her lips crumpled like a bit of paper in the fire, her eyes rolled up her head, her hands clinched, and she went off into a convulsion. Edith, eved, frightened and pale, found herself alone in the woods with appar ently a dying woman. She was young and strong and the old lady was light. She seemed wasted by fasting or sickness, perhaps both. Edith must try to get her out of the thicket to the top of the lane, where she could call for aid. She dashed more water from the brook in the poor creature's face, but it did no good. She chafed her hands, but her teeth were clinched, and her whole form was quite stiff and thick and soft about the roots. Here she put down the old woman's ine form, and with her handkersensible form, and with her handkerchief wiped away a little foam that

The young people returned to the Ashley mansion to find that Celestina had been removed by the doctor's order to the Littlefield hospital, and there was good hope of her recovery.
They seemed to have grown quite intimate in this half hour of intercourse.

"Ford's Alley?" and Fanny looked at ter and shouts of the players on the tennis court over the wall. She took off her hat and waved it, but they did not see her. She cried out faintly, but her voice seemed muffled and lost in her throat.

"Oh, come, come! Help! There is a woman dying up in the woods! Come quick, or it will be too late!"

Young Harold Ashley had just sent his ball out of bounds, and was searching for it near the low boundary wall when he saw this apparition of a young girl, her face as pale as ashes, with great, wide, frightened eyes and parted lips, her hair, which the tree boughs had torn loose from its fasten-

A Brilliant Speech.

Hon. Edward Blake's Address at the Canadian Dinner,

At Hotel Cecil, London, England-Noble and Loyal Sentiments Splendidly Expressed.

Special Correspondence of The Advertiser. The following is the speech of Hon. Edward Blake, M.P., at the Canadian dinner, Hotel Cecil, London, England, on June 29 last: Sir Donald Smith, my Lords and

"Our Guests," coupled with the names of Lord Balfour of Burleigh, secretary for Ireland; Mr. Reid, prime minister of New South Wales and Sir Gordon Sprigg, prime minister of the Cape. I rejoice that on this occasion the very names of those who are to spand amply indicate the special fea-ture of this Dominion Day dinner, namely, that wonderful growth of goodwill and patriotism, of mutual atachment and the sentiment of kinship between the great colonies and the plessed fruit of enlarged liberties, freer institutions and local self-government and which has proved to demonstration that every galling cord relaxed, every local liberty conferred has been, by a beneficent, but most obvious alchemy, transmuted into a link of tachment, impalpable indeed and colonies in different quarters of the globe; but they stand for more tonight. Mr. Reid stands, not for New South Wales alone, but for all Australia; and through him we drink "To the men of a million acres, To the sons of the Golden South." Sir Gordon Sprigg stands, not for the Cape only, but for British South Africa; and we drink through him "To the last and largest empire, With its map but half-unrolled."

God grant we may, so far as in us lies, keep that map unstained! I am Fanny Ashley, and this is my brother Harold. As our acquaintance has begun so romantically, I am sure it ought to continue. I do hope you quote again: "I charge you, charge your glasses;
