Jimmy Johnson, the negro who gave himself up to the Detroit police, and who was brought here charged with being an accessory to the killing of Jacob Enos, on July 18, will come up for his preliminary hearing today. He tells much the same story of the murder as Guy Needham, the man who was slashed with a razor. He says he is a pal of Jackson's, and came here on the Saturday before the shooting to have a good time, but without any idea of getting into trouble. As soon as he learned that the police were looking for him he gave himself up. The last he saw of Jackson was on the Tuesday after the murder, Johnson is an enthusiastic baseball fan, and is quite familiar to the frequenters of Bennett's Park, Detroit, whenever a game is in recrease.
