YOUNG LONDONER DIES AT AROSA, SWITZERLAND

George, Son of Mr. Joseph Scandrett, Succumbs to Long Illness.

John Scandrett received a cablegram from his brother, Mr. Joseph Scandrett, on Saturday, which stated that the latter's son, George, had died in Arosa, Switzerland, that morning. The message stated that he would return with the body on the Laurentic, sailing on April 26, and would arrive in this city about May The funeral arrangements will not be completed until the arrival of the George Scandrett, who was 20 years of age, left in January for a trip to Europe, the object of which was to morove his health, but he caught cold while escaping from a burning hotel, and the condition of his health became critical, and his father was summoned to his bedside in time to be with him for a couple of weeks before his death. He is survived by his parents, to whom will be extended the warmest thoughts of sympathy by a host of friends.

of the married woman's right to a cer-tain element of freedom within the bonds (or shackles) of marriage. With a millionaire and a ten-dollara-week telephone girl as the dramatic principles, the author's moral principle simmers down to a protest, not against really common conditions, but rather against an isolated example of veritable white slavery. The acting, if not superlative, extremely satisfactory. Helen Mac-kellar, as Virginia Blaine, the young wife, who is "bought and pald for," is easily the star of the production. She goes through a difficult crying scene, with an exacting nicety, that held the audience of men and women tranced, and breathless as children attending their first melodrama. George Mackellar, as Robert Stafford, plays his part well. Maud Allan, as Fanny Blaine, makes an excellent milliner. Enriched by her brother-inlaw, she does not overdo her part, but one is constantly tormented by fear that she is going to overdo it. Perhaps also, the 98-cent bargain sale shirtwaists of the Blaine sisters were

he merest shade too "frumpy."
Ralph Simone, as Oku, the Japanese servant, is delightful. William Caryl, as James Gilley, the $14-a-week shipping clerk, afterwards Mr. James Gilley, Stafford's brother-in-law, does his work uniformly well. Dolly Simone, as the French maid, is fair. In the end it is love, not principles, that win, and in this the author can be forgiven for the undramatic and unreal happy ending of the play, throughout which the primary moral and its associated eugenistic teaching is made subservient to other and secondary morals
