

BRINGING UP FATHER

HOW TO GET A LINE ON THE NEWS OF THE DAY.

FATHER CAN I HAVE THE SECTION?

CAN'T YOU WAIT A MINUTE I'LL BE THROUGH WITH THE WHOLE PAPER THEN.

DID YOU HEAR ME? HAND OVER THE SOCIETY PART.

SORRY SIR - TO DISTURB YOU - BUT I HAVE A PIECE OF THAT PAPER - I GOT TA WRAP UP A PIE FOR THE ICE-MAN.

HOWDY-JIGGLES - WHAT'S THE NEWS?

HOW DO I KNOW!!!

HERE TAKE IT!

© 1920 BY INTL. FEATURE SERVICE, INC.

BY GEORGE McMANUS

BY GEORGE McMANUS

Social and Personal

Finnegan-McPherson.

A quiet wedding took place at the home of Mrs. Esther McPherson, 84 Inkerman street, on Wednesday, June 22, when her only daughter, Maude Elsie, was united in marriage to P. J. Finnegan by Rev. W. R. McIntosh.

The marriage was solemnized on Tuesday afternoon by Rev. A. C. Bingham, at his residence, 1011 Smith street, of Margaret Grace Potter to Charles Astles, Miss Verna Have attended the bride, and Mr. James Astles was the groomsmen. After their return from the honeymoon, which will be spent in the East, Mr. and Mrs. Astles will reside in London.

A quiet wedding took place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George White, 1022 Mabel street, on Wednesday evening, when their daughter, Pearl, was united in marriage to Mr. Vernon Howard Ball, of the groomsmen. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. C. Bingham in the presence of about 60 guests. Miss Ethel White was the bride's bridesmaid, and Mr. Roy White attended the groom. Mr. and Mrs. Ball have gone on an extended wedding tour.

A wedding of much interest was solemnized on Wednesday morning in St. Francis Church, Tilbury, when Miss Anna Annesner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Annesner, of Tilbury, became the bride of Everett Wilson, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Wilson, of town. The bride looked charming in her bridal gown of white, with tulle veil arranged in coronet fashion almost enveloping the gown. The bridesmaid, her sister, Miss Lena, was attired in pale pink with broad trimmed natural leghorn hat. Clarence Gleason, of Tilbury East, was best man. Monseigneur Parent officiated. Following the ceremony the bride and groom were accompanied by showers of good wishes.

A very quiet wedding took place at "Green Gables," Tilbury, on Wednesday, June 23, when the daughter of Rev. C. N. Lloyd, P. C., only daughter of Rev. C. N. Lloyd, P. C., was united in marriage to E. Lloyd P. C., eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. E. Lloyd P. C. The bride, who was given away by her brother, Gordon C. Dewey, looked very charming in a gown of ivory georgette with deep trimming, and veil with orange-blossoms. The groom wore a suit of sweetest roses. She wore the groom's gift, a pearl lavalier. Miss Louise Hawthorne, of Brantford, was the bride, acted as flower girl, pretty dressed in white, veil trimmed with ribbon. The bridesmaid, Miss Hester A. M. Fisher, of Courtland, was given away by her brother, Gordon C. Dewey, who carried the bride's bouquet. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. N. Lloyd, P. C., at the bride's father, after which a fairly good luncheon was served. Amid showers of confetti and happy wishes, the bride and groom were escorted to the motor for Toronto and Muskoka, the bride traveling in a French coach of accordion pleated blue satin and flared georgette with flower-trimmed lace hat. The groom's gift to the bride was a pearl lavalier, and to the little flower girl a string of pearls. Guests were received at the home of the bride, Mr. and Mrs. E. Lloyd P. C., of London, Dorchester, Windsor, Brantford, Toronto, Chicago, and South America. The bride and groom were accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. E. Lloyd P. C., of London, Dorchester, Windsor, Brantford, Toronto, Chicago, and South America.

HEALTH TALKS

By John B. Huber, A. M., M. D.

Obesity.

Why are a great many people stouter than they ought to be or than they want to be?

Obesity comes on sometimes by reason of hereditary, a family tendency. In some cases this tendency is shown soon after birth. But generally speaking, it does not manifest itself until after 40. Some such overweighted are remarkably light feeders, and are rather more active in their daily occupations than their neighbors. And yet they remain stout. Such people can do much in the way of keeping themselves from becoming enormous, but they must once and for all give up all idea of having light, willowy and "svelte" figures.

However, such cases of hereditary stoutness are not so frequent as imagined. There have been people of enormous weight, in the freak class, whose parents were no stouter than ordinary, and in some instances underweight. As a general rule, obesity is acquired after birth and is not hereditary. With many stout people the question is a good deal one of temperament; it goes against the grain for them to reduce. The process makes them miserable, and the outcome they had rather remain fat and friendly and kindly than get thin and mean-tempered, which latter goes hopelessly

Newest Arrivals of Suits, Coats and Dresses

In the season's latest styles and shades at reasonable prices. Your inspection is invited.

Justrite Ladies' Wear

284 Dundas Street. Phone 2614.

FREE-RUNNING, for Kitchen and Dairy Use.

Made in Canada by The Western Salt Co., Limited, Copyright, Ontario.

FREE-RUNNING, for Kitchen and Dairy Use.

Made in Canada by The Western Salt Co., Limited, Copyright, Ontario.

FREE-RUNNING, for Kitchen and Dairy Use.

Made in Canada by The Western Salt Co., Limited, Copyright, Ontario.

FREE-RUNNING, for Kitchen and Dairy Use.

Made in Canada by The Western Salt Co., Limited, Copyright, Ontario.

FREE-RUNNING, for Kitchen and Dairy Use.

Made in Canada by The Western Salt Co., Limited, Copyright, Ontario.

FREE-RUNNING, for Kitchen and Dairy Use.

Made in Canada by The Western Salt Co., Limited, Copyright, Ontario.

FREE-RUNNING, for Kitchen and Dairy Use.

Made in Canada by The Western Salt Co., Limited, Copyright, Ontario.

FREE-RUNNING, for Kitchen and Dairy Use.

Made in Canada by The Western Salt Co., Limited, Copyright, Ontario.

FREE-RUNNING, for Kitchen and Dairy Use.

Made in Canada by The Western Salt Co., Limited, Copyright, Ontario.

THE MARRIAGE MILL

A story of the greatest enemy of marital felicity—meddlesome in-laws.

BY MILDRED K. BARBOUR.

(Copyright 1920, by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.)

XI—FAINT SUSPICION.

Mrs. Osborne's only reply to her son's declaration of independence was a shrug of her shapely shoulders. But her eyes, glistening suddenly with uncontainable tears as she looked down her gloved fingers nervously playing with the chain of her purse.

"You shouldn't talk so to your mother, Laurie." She turned reproachful eyes upon her nephew, but his mother darted an angry glance at her champion and Jane scurried back to the chair, flushed and breathless.

"We really must be going," she said casually, giving Mrs. Crosby a significant look which brought her also to her feet. "So good-bye to you all."

His bride was pouring tea for Dora Whitehead, but she raised her quaint almond-shaped eyes longingly to his. "Why didn't you say something when your mother mentioned it? I thought 'Good Lord, no!'" he expostulated.

"Then why didn't you tell her so?" she persisted.

"Wasn't that awful? I just attended a tea of family skeletons and more festive they become the more they talked. Why do we commit our domestic murders in public? Look!" she pointed down the broad shoulder and determined chin was afraid of his mother's street. We might just as well have

SIDE TALKS

BY RUTH CAMERON

A MIGHTY MEANS OF SECURING TRUTH

happiness in life is to spin out in all directions, without any rules, a spider, complete web of love, and catch in it all that you can—old men and young men, children, policemen." Tolstoi.

The distinguished editor of one of the largest magazines came to town to see the Authorman recently.

To make this visit he had to go several hundred miles out of his way, and the Authorman expected he would stay at least overnight. But as soon as he arrived he explained that he must be off again in three hours.

"Three hours?" said the distinguished editor. "And you've come all this distance, Great Scott, man, how can you stand it?"

"Stand it?" said the distinguished editor. "Why, this is nothing." After a moment he said, "I did not come to W— and back before Friday (this was Wednesday) and you know that?"

"Don't you get bored to death with this kind of chattering around?" someone asked.

"Not a bit of it," said the editor. "Why, I had the time of my life coming up here. It's a part of the country I've never been in before, and it's certainly lovely at this time of year."

And then I had the most interesting traveling companion. You ought to hear him tell about the show he's done. Killed 15 bears last summer, he said, and he was with me when he had him. And what kind of you think it was? Well, it was a porcupine, just the kind my grandfather used to make me hunt for."

"When we had done laughing at his cleverly arranged climax, he went on: 'I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything.'"

"Who was the distinguished editor found traveling no hardship. What he meant by his tale was so plainly has 'the mighty means of securing truth happiness,' of which Tolstoi speaks."

"To be sure," he would probably not say that he loves all these people with whom he begins his travels. And perhaps 'love' is too strong a word. But substitute for love in the quotation the word of choice, and we have interest and friendly feeling; and Tolstoi's dictum is still true."

"I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything."

"When we had done laughing at his cleverly arranged climax, he went on: 'I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything.'"

"Who was the distinguished editor found traveling no hardship. What he meant by his tale was so plainly has 'the mighty means of securing truth happiness,' of which Tolstoi speaks."

"To be sure," he would probably not say that he loves all these people with whom he begins his travels. And perhaps 'love' is too strong a word. But substitute for love in the quotation the word of choice, and we have interest and friendly feeling; and Tolstoi's dictum is still true."

"I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything."

"When we had done laughing at his cleverly arranged climax, he went on: 'I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything.'"

"Who was the distinguished editor found traveling no hardship. What he meant by his tale was so plainly has 'the mighty means of securing truth happiness,' of which Tolstoi speaks."

"To be sure," he would probably not say that he loves all these people with whom he begins his travels. And perhaps 'love' is too strong a word. But substitute for love in the quotation the word of choice, and we have interest and friendly feeling; and Tolstoi's dictum is still true."

"I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything."

"When we had done laughing at his cleverly arranged climax, he went on: 'I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything.'"

THE MARRIAGE MILL

A story of the greatest enemy of marital felicity—meddlesome in-laws.

BY MILDRED K. BARBOUR.

(Copyright 1920, by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.)

XI—FAINT SUSPICION.

Mrs. Osborne's only reply to her son's declaration of independence was a shrug of her shapely shoulders. But her eyes, glistening suddenly with uncontainable tears as she looked down her gloved fingers nervously playing with the chain of her purse.

"You shouldn't talk so to your mother, Laurie." She turned reproachful eyes upon her nephew, but his mother darted an angry glance at her champion and Jane scurried back to the chair, flushed and breathless.

"We really must be going," she said casually, giving Mrs. Crosby a significant look which brought her also to her feet. "So good-bye to you all."

His bride was pouring tea for Dora Whitehead, but she raised her quaint almond-shaped eyes longingly to his. "Why didn't you say something when your mother mentioned it? I thought 'Good Lord, no!'" he expostulated.

"Then why didn't you tell her so?" she persisted.

"Wasn't that awful? I just attended a tea of family skeletons and more festive they become the more they talked. Why do we commit our domestic murders in public? Look!" she pointed down the broad shoulder and determined chin was afraid of his mother's street. We might just as well have happiness in life is to spin out in all directions, without any rules, a spider, complete web of love, and catch in it all that you can—old men and young men, children, policemen." Tolstoi.

SIDE TALKS

BY RUTH CAMERON

A MIGHTY MEANS OF SECURING TRUTH

The distinguished editor of one of the largest magazines came to town to see the Authorman recently.

To make this visit he had to go several hundred miles out of his way, and the Authorman expected he would stay at least overnight. But as soon as he arrived he explained that he must be off again in three hours.

"Three hours?" said the distinguished editor. "And you've come all this distance, Great Scott, man, how can you stand it?"

"Stand it?" said the distinguished editor. "Why, this is nothing." After a moment he said, "I did not come to W— and back before Friday (this was Wednesday) and you know that?"

"Don't you get bored to death with this kind of chattering around?" someone asked.

"Not a bit of it," said the editor. "Why, I had the time of my life coming up here. It's a part of the country I've never been in before, and it's certainly lovely at this time of year."

And then I had the most interesting traveling companion. You ought to hear him tell about the show he's done. Killed 15 bears last summer, he said, and he was with me when he had him. And what kind of you think it was? Well, it was a porcupine, just the kind my grandfather used to make me hunt for."

"When we had done laughing at his cleverly arranged climax, he went on: 'I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything.'"

"Who was the distinguished editor found traveling no hardship. What he meant by his tale was so plainly has 'the mighty means of securing truth happiness,' of which Tolstoi speaks."

"To be sure," he would probably not say that he loves all these people with whom he begins his travels. And perhaps 'love' is too strong a word. But substitute for love in the quotation the word of choice, and we have interest and friendly feeling; and Tolstoi's dictum is still true."

"I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything."

"When we had done laughing at his cleverly arranged climax, he went on: 'I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything.'"

"Who was the distinguished editor found traveling no hardship. What he meant by his tale was so plainly has 'the mighty means of securing truth happiness,' of which Tolstoi speaks."

"To be sure," he would probably not say that he loves all these people with whom he begins his travels. And perhaps 'love' is too strong a word. But substitute for love in the quotation the word of choice, and we have interest and friendly feeling; and Tolstoi's dictum is still true."

"I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything."

"When we had done laughing at his cleverly arranged climax, he went on: 'I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything.'"

"Who was the distinguished editor found traveling no hardship. What he meant by his tale was so plainly has 'the mighty means of securing truth happiness,' of which Tolstoi speaks."

"To be sure," he would probably not say that he loves all these people with whom he begins his travels. And perhaps 'love' is too strong a word. But substitute for love in the quotation the word of choice, and we have interest and friendly feeling; and Tolstoi's dictum is still true."

"I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything."

"When we had done laughing at his cleverly arranged climax, he went on: 'I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything.'"

THE MARRIAGE MILL

A story of the greatest enemy of marital felicity—meddlesome in-laws.

BY MILDRED K. BARBOUR.

(Copyright 1920, by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.)

XI—FAINT SUSPICION.

Mrs. Osborne's only reply to her son's declaration of independence was a shrug of her shapely shoulders. But her eyes, glistening suddenly with uncontainable tears as she looked down her gloved fingers nervously playing with the chain of her purse.

"You shouldn't talk so to your mother, Laurie." She turned reproachful eyes upon her nephew, but his mother darted an angry glance at her champion and Jane scurried back to the chair, flushed and breathless.

"We really must be going," she said casually, giving Mrs. Crosby a significant look which brought her also to her feet. "So good-bye to you all."

His bride was pouring tea for Dora Whitehead, but she raised her quaint almond-shaped eyes longingly to his. "Why didn't you say something when your mother mentioned it? I thought 'Good Lord, no!'" he expostulated.

"Then why didn't you tell her so?" she persisted.

"Wasn't that awful? I just attended a tea of family skeletons and more festive they become the more they talked. Why do we commit our domestic murders in public? Look!" she pointed down the broad shoulder and determined chin was afraid of his mother's street. We might just as well have happiness in life is to spin out in all directions, without any rules, a spider, complete web of love, and catch in it all that you can—old men and young men, children, policemen." Tolstoi.

SIDE TALKS

BY RUTH CAMERON

A MIGHTY MEANS OF SECURING TRUTH

The distinguished editor of one of the largest magazines came to town to see the Authorman recently.

To make this visit he had to go several hundred miles out of his way, and the Authorman expected he would stay at least overnight. But as soon as he arrived he explained that he must be off again in three hours.

"Three hours?" said the distinguished editor. "And you've come all this distance, Great Scott, man, how can you stand it?"

"Stand it?" said the distinguished editor. "Why, this is nothing." After a moment he said, "I did not come to W— and back before Friday (this was Wednesday) and you know that?"

"Don't you get bored to death with this kind of chattering around?" someone asked.

"Not a bit of it," said the editor. "Why, I had the time of my life coming up here. It's a part of the country I've never been in before, and it's certainly lovely at this time of year."

And then I had the most interesting traveling companion. You ought to hear him tell about the show he's done. Killed 15 bears last summer, he said, and he was with me when he had him. And what kind of you think it was? Well, it was a porcupine, just the kind my grandfather used to make me hunt for."

"When we had done laughing at his cleverly arranged climax, he went on: 'I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything.'"

"Who was the distinguished editor found traveling no hardship. What he meant by his tale was so plainly has 'the mighty means of securing truth happiness,' of which Tolstoi speaks."

"To be sure," he would probably not say that he loves all these people with whom he begins his travels. And perhaps 'love' is too strong a word. But substitute for love in the quotation the word of choice, and we have interest and friendly feeling; and Tolstoi's dictum is still true."

"I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything."

"When we had done laughing at his cleverly arranged climax, he went on: 'I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything.'"

"Who was the distinguished editor found traveling no hardship. What he meant by his tale was so plainly has 'the mighty means of securing truth happiness,' of which Tolstoi speaks."

"To be sure," he would probably not say that he loves all these people with whom he begins his travels. And perhaps 'love' is too strong a word. But substitute for love in the quotation the word of choice, and we have interest and friendly feeling; and Tolstoi's dictum is still true."

"I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything."

"When we had done laughing at his cleverly arranged climax, he went on: 'I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything.'"

"Who was the distinguished editor found traveling no hardship. What he meant by his tale was so plainly has 'the mighty means of securing truth happiness,' of which Tolstoi speaks."

"To be sure," he would probably not say that he loves all these people with whom he begins his travels. And perhaps 'love' is too strong a word. But substitute for love in the quotation the word of choice, and we have interest and friendly feeling; and Tolstoi's dictum is still true."

"I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything."

"When we had done laughing at his cleverly arranged climax, he went on: 'I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on the train. He sat with me the last hundred miles and we talked about everything.'"

THE MARRIAGE MILL

A story of the greatest enemy of marital felicity—meddlesome in-laws.

BY MILDRED K. BARBOUR.

(Copyright 1920, by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.)

XI—FAINT SUSPICION.

Mrs. Osborne's only reply to her son's declaration of independence was a shrug of her shapely shoulders. But her eyes, glistening suddenly with uncontainable tears as she looked down her gloved fingers nervously playing with the chain of her purse.

"You shouldn't talk so to your mother, Laurie." She turned reproachful eyes upon her nephew, but his mother darted an angry glance at her champion and Jane scurried back to the chair, flushed and breathless.

"We really must be going," she said casually, giving Mrs. Crosby a significant look which brought her also to her feet. "So good-bye to you all."

His bride was pouring tea for Dora Whitehead, but she raised her quaint almond-shaped eyes longingly to his. "Why didn't you say something when your mother mentioned it? I thought 'Good Lord, no!'" he expostulated.

"Then why didn't you tell her so?" she persisted.

"Wasn't that awful? I just attended a tea of family skeletons and more festive they become the more they talked. Why do we commit our domestic murders in public? Look!" she pointed down the broad shoulder and determined chin was afraid of his mother's street. We might just as well have happiness in life is to spin out in all directions, without any rules, a spider, complete web of love, and catch in it all that you can—old men and young men, children, policemen." Tolstoi.

SIDE TALKS

BY RUTH CAMERON

A MIGHTY MEANS OF SECURING TRUTH

The distinguished editor of one of the largest magazines came to town to see the Authorman recently.

To make this visit he had to go several hundred miles out of his way, and the Authorman expected he would stay at least overnight. But as soon as he arrived he explained that he must be off again in three hours.

"Three hours?" said the distinguished editor. "And you've come all this distance, Great Scott, man, how can you stand it?"

"Stand it?" said the distinguished editor. "Why, this is nothing." After a moment he said, "I did not come to W— and back before Friday (this was Wednesday) and you know that?"

"Don't you get bored to death with this kind of chattering around?" someone asked.

"Not a bit of it," said the editor. "Why, I had the time of my life coming up here. It's a part of the country I've never been in before, and it's certainly lovely at this time of year."

And then I had the most interesting traveling companion. You ought to hear him tell about the show he's done. Killed 15 bears last summer, he said, and he was with me when he had him. And what kind of you think it was? Well, it was a porcupine, just the kind my grandfather used to make me hunt for."

"When we had done laughing at his cleverly arranged climax, he went on: 'I don't know how I've enjoyed a younger man than myself, and I think one, though I'm always meeting out kinds on