

was offered research work in anthropology in New Guinea by the Australian National Research Council. I made two expeditions to New Guinea in two successive years - a short period recovering from fever in between in Australia.

This year, 1929-30, I accepted a University Fellowship in Columbia in order to write up the results of my New Guinea field work and in order to further my academic training. I expect to complete a Ph. D. degree here in two months' time.