

that I re-publish these Letters under a borrowed signature, I have only to say, that the cause of truth needs not the support of any name. I do not hold the disclosure of mine to be essential in a discussion of this nature. I glory however too much in the object of my labor, to be particularly anxious to conceal such a circumstance. If, therefore, my opponents are equally conscious of the integrity of their cause, and will boldly set their names to their performances, mine shall no longer remain a secret. 'Till then I re-

V E R U S.